Office Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
DEC 6 1961
JOHN F. DAVIS, CLERK

Supreme Court of the United States

October Term, 1961

No. ..587

LEO B. MITTELMAN,

Petitioner,

AGAINST

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SECOND CIRCUIT

OSMOND K. FRAENKEL,
Counsel for Petitioner.

LODER APPEAL PRESS, INC., 41 VESEY STREET, NEW YORK, N. Y. WOrth 2-0689

INDEX

	PAGE
The Opinions Below	2
The Grounds of Jurisdiction	2
Questions Presented for Review	3
Statutes and Rules Involved	5
Rule Involved	10
Statement of the Case	11
The Government's Opening Statement	12
The Evidence	13
The Evidence Relating to Petitioner Under Count 2	19
The Evidence Under Count 50	28
The Carroll Testimony	32
The Trial Court's Attitude	33
The McCarthy Guilty Plea	35
The Acquittal of the Broker Defendants	36
Reasons for Allowing the Writ	39
Supporting Argument	41
(a) The $19,000	56

PAGE

(b) The Trial Court's Attitude 57

(c) The Carroll Testimony 57

(d) The Government's Cross-Examination of Its Own Witness 57

(e) Receipt of Evidence 58

(f) Other Evidence 58

(g) The Post Verdict Motion 61

Conclusion 63

Appendix:

Opinion of United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit 65

Opinion Denying Petition for Rehearing 66

Judgment 68

Cases Cited

Anderson v. United States, 318 U. S. 350 53

Bell v. United States, 349 U. S. 81 45

Blumenfield v. United States, 285 F. 2d 46 46

Cramer v. United States, 325 U. S. 136 53

Darby v. United States, 293 F. 2d 33 53

Duncan v. United States, 23 F. 2d 3 53

Dunn v. United States, 284 U. S. 390 .....40, 45, 46, 47

PAGE

Edgerton v. United States, 164 U. S. 361 ..... 40, 52

Feder v. United States, 257 F. 694 53

Gazner v. United States, 9 F. 2d 603 53

John Hohenadel v. United States, 295 F. 489 46

Jencks v. United States, 353 U. S. 657 ..... 40, 48

Kotteakos v. United States, 328 U. S. 750 ...39, 44, 52, 60

Macklin v. United States, 79 F. 2d 756 46

Marshall v. United States, 360 U. S. 310 36

Michelsen v. United States, 335 U. S. 469 51

Murphy v. United States, 18 F. 2d 509 46

McAlpine v. United States, 129 F. 2d 737 44

McBoyle v. United States, 283 U. S. 25 45

McDonald v. Pless, 238 U. S. 264 62

McDonald v. United States, 335 U. S. 451 53

Nelson v. United States, 208 F. 2d 505 53

Owens v. United States, 221 F. 2d 351 44

Palermo v. United States, 360 U. S. 343 ..... 47, 48

Peru v. United States, 4 F. 2d 881 46

Richards v. United States, 193 F. 2d 554 62

Rotund v. Isthmian S.S. Co., 243 F. 2d 581 62

PAGE

Schaffer v. U. S., 266 F. 2d 435; 362 U. S. 511 ..53, 54, 55

Schiefer v. United States, 288 Fed. 368 62

S. E. C. v. Ralston Purina Co., 346 U. S. 119 45

Smith v. United States, 230 F. 2d 935 53

Steckler v. United States, 7 F. 2d 59 46

Stromberg v. California, 283 U. S. 359 53

United States v. Cardiff, 344 U. S. 174 45

United States v. Cohen, 145 F. 2d 82 43

United States v. Peoni, 100 F. 2d 401 61

United States v. Resnick, 299 U. S. 207 45

United States v. Thomson, 113 F. 2d 643 53

United States v. Tomaiola, 249 F. 2d 683 53

United States v. Woodell, 285 F. 2d 316 46

Weiss v. United States, 122 F. 2d 675 44

William v. North Carolina, 317 U. S. 287 53

Wood v. United States, 279 F. 2d 359 62

Yates v. United States, 354 U. S. 298 53

Statutes Cited

Title 28 U. S. C.:

Section 1254(1) 2

Title 15 U. S. C.:

Section 77e 5

Section 77d 5, 39

Section 77x 6

PAGE

Title 18 U. S. C.:

Section 371 7

Section 3500 ..... 8, 40

Section 1341 7

S.E.C. Rule 133 10

Federal Rules of Civil Procedure:

Rule 7(c) 11

Authority Cited

8 Wigmore on Evidence, Section 2349 62

Constitution of the United States

Sixth Amendment 42, 50

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM 1961

No. .....

LEO B. MITTELMAN,

Petitioner,

AGAINST

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SECOND CIRCUIT

To the Chief Justice of the United States and the Associate Justices of the United States Supreme Court:

Petitioner respectfully asks this Court to issue a writ of certiorari to review the final judgment of the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit which affirmed petitioner's conviction under 15 U. S. C. 77 (e) (a) (1) and for conspiracy to violate 15 U. S. C. 77 (x).

Petitioner was charged with participation in a mail fraud scheme in violation of 18 U. S. C. 1341 and 1342 under Counts 2-32 (J. 39a-50a).* [He was not charged with participation in the Count 1 wire fraud scheme (J. 36a-39a).] He was also charged in Counts 33-49 with substantive violations of the Securities Act of 1933 [15 U. S. C. §77e (a) (1) and §77x] and a conspiracy count (no. 50) (J. 50a-95a). Thirty-six of these counts were submitted to the jury. Petitioner was acquitted of thirty-four and convicted only under Counts 2 and 50 (J. 25a).

* Page references preceded by "J" are to pages of the joint appendix; those preceded by "G" are to the appendix of Goldberg and Reiber; and those by "R" to the filed transcript

The sentence was imprisonment for five years on Count 2, imprisonment for five consecutive years and a committed fine of $10,000.00 on Count 50, suspension of the second prison term, and five consecutive years of probation (J. 30a).

The Opinions Below

The Court of Appeals' opinion is reported at 294 F. 2d 928. A copy is hereto annexed (infra, p. 65). The Court of Appeals' per curiam opinion on the application for rehearing is not yet reported. A copy is hereto annexed (infra, p. 66).

The Grounds of Jurisdiction

(i) The judgment sought to be reviewed was dated and entered on August 22, 1961.

(ii) Timely petition for rehearing was filed and denied on November 6, 1961.

(iii) Jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U. S. C. §1254 (1).

Questions Presented for Review

1. Whether the Court below erred in approving the refusal of the Trial Court, and of the District Court on a motion made before trial, to dismiss Counts 2 and 50 of the indictment, particularly because of the incorporation in Counts 2 and 50 of the allegations of Count 1 with respect to the unlawful acquisition of control of Texas-Adams Oil Co. Inc. (Texas-Adams).

2. Whether the Trial Court should have dismissed Count 50 because the term "public offering" in Section 4 (1) of the Securities Act of 1933 is too vague and uncertain to support a criminal accusation.

3. Whether the Court below erred in refusing to set aside petitioner's conviction under Count 2, where such conviction is necessarily inconsistent with the verdict of innocence with respect to Count 12.

4. Whether the court below erred in sustaining the rulings of the trial court which:

a. Admitted or refused to strike the testimony of witnesses previously interviewed by the prosecutors, despite proof that the latter had made contemporaneous notes of such interviews, that such notes reflected statements of the witnesses with substantial accuracy, that they were subsequently altered by deletions and interpolations and transcribed to witness sheets, and that they were destroyed after such transcription on the grounds that they were not entirely and exclusively verbatim, and that the prosecutors were not agents of the Government within the meaning of Sec. 3500; and

b. Denied defense access to such witness sheets on those grounds.

5. Whether the Court below erred in sustaining the trial court's charge with respect to character testimony.

6. Whether, after reversing the conviction of the three broker defendants and dismissing the indictment as to them, the Court below should not also have reversed the conviction of petitioner because prejudicial evidence was received against him which would not have been admissible but for the presence of said broker defendants in the case as alleged co-conspirators.

7. Whether petitioner had a fair trial:

(a) Where the prosecutor made serious accusations against petitioner to the jury in his opening statement inconsistent with facts which could easily have been ascertained, and did not withdraw those accusations after attempting and failing to prove them;

(b) Where the trial court pursued a course of harassment, repression and denigration of petitioner's counsel which impaired petitioner's right to fearless representation;

(c) Where the prosecutor knowingly adduced false testimony prejudicial to petitioner.

(d) Where the prosecutor falsely claimed surprise by the testimony of a Government witness, to secure the right of cross-examination; where he was permitted to incorporate in such cross-examination conflicting statements attributed to him by postal inspectors in an interview report the witness had not signed, and had previously repudiated; where he failed to call the claimed authors of the report as witnesses; and where such cross-examination prejudiced petitioner.

(e) Where the Trial Court admitted over objection collateral prejudicial evidence;

(f) Where the Trial Court accepted a plea of guilty from a co-defendant, refused petitioner's request for appropriate instructions in respect thereof, and, denied a post-verdict motion for a new trial based on jury misconduct in obtaining and using newspaper and other reports of that plea in violation of repeated instructions of the Trial Court.

(g) Where after a long trial, the Trial Court made serious misstatements of fact in its charge, and refused to entertain exceptions and requests to charge relating to the facts.

Statutes and Rules Involved

15 U. S. C. §77e. Prohibitions relating to interstate commerce and mails.

(a) Unless a registration statement is in effect as to a security, it shall be unlawful for any person, directly or indirectly—

> (1) to make use of any means or instruments of transportation or communication in interstate commerce or of the mails to sell such security through the use or medium of any prospectus or otherwise; or
>
> (2) to carry or cause to be carried through the mails or in interstate commerce, by any means or instruments of transportation, any such security for the purpose of sale or for delivery after sale.

15 U. S. C. §77d. Exempted transactions.

The provisions of section 77e of this title shall not apply to any of the following transactions:

(1) Transactions by any person other than an issuer, underwriter, or dealer; transactions by an issuer not involving any public offering; or transactions by a dealer (including an underwriter no longer acting as an underwriter in respect of the security involved in such transaction), except transactions taking place prior to the expiration of forty days after the first date upon which the security was bona fide offered to the public by the issuer or by or through an underwriter and transactions in a security as to which a registration statement has been filed taking place prior to the expiration of forty days after the effective date of such registration statement or prior to the expiration of forty days after the first date upon which the security was bona fide offered to the public by the issuer or by or through an underwriter after such effective date, whichever is later (excluding in the computation of such forty days any time during which a stop order issued under section 77h of this title is in effect as to the security), and except transactions as to securities constituting the whole or a part of an unsold allotment to or subscription by such dealer as a participant in the distribution of such securities by the issuer or by or through an underwriter.

15 U. S. C. §77x. Penalties.

Any person who willfully violates any of the provisions of this subchapter, or the rules and regulations promulgated by the Commission under authority thereof, or any person who willfully, in a registration statement filed under this subchapter, makes any untrue statement of a material fact or omits to state any material fact required to be stated therein or necessary to make the statements therein not misleading, shall upon conviction be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

18 U. S. C. §371. Conspiracy to commit offense or to defraud United States.

If two or more persons conspire either to commit any offense against the United States, or to defraud the United States, or any agency thereof in any manner or for any purpose, and one or more of such persons do any act to effect the object of the conspiracy, each shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

If, however, the offense, the commission of which is the object of the conspiracy, is a misdemeanor only, the punishment for such conspiracy, is a misdemeanor only, the punishment for such conspiracy shall not exceed the maximum punishment provided for such misdemeanor.

18 U. S. C. §1341. Frauds and swindles.

Whoever, having devised or intending to devise any scheme or artifice to defraud, or for obtaining money or property by means of false or fraudulent pretenses, representations, or promises, or to sell, dispose of, loan, exchange, alter, give away, distribute, supply, or furnish or procure for unlawful use any counterfeit or spurious coin, obligation, security, or other article, or anything represented to be or intimated or held out to be such counterfeit or spurious article, for the purpose of executing such scheme or artifice, or attempting so to do, places in any post office or authorized depository for mail matter, any matter or thing whatever to be sent or delivered by the Post Office Department, or takes or receives therefrom, any such matter or thing, or knowingly causes to be delivered by mail according to the direction thereon, or at the place at which it is directed to be delivered by the person to whom it is addressed, any such matter or thing, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned no more than five years, or both.

18 U. S. C. §3500. Demands for production of statements and reports of witnesses.

(a) In any criminal prosecution brought by the United States, no statement or report in the possession of the United States which was made by a Government witness or prospective Government witness (other than the defendant) to an agent of the Government shall be the subject of subpena, discovery, or inspection until said witness has testified on direct examination in the trial of the case.

(b) After a witness called by the United States has testified on direct examination, the court shall, on motion of the defendant, order the United States to produce any statement (as hereinafter defined) of the witness in the possession of the United States which relates to the subject matter as to which the witness has testified. If the entire contents of any such statement relate to the subject matter of the testimony of the witness, the court shall order it to be delivered directly to the defendant for his examination and use.

(c) If the United States claims that any statement ordered to be produced under this section contains matter which does not relate to the subject matter of the testimony of the witness, the court shall order the United States to deliver such statement for the inspection of the court in camera. Upon such delivery the court shall excise the portions of such statement which do not relate to the subject matter of the testimony of the witness. With such material excised, the court shall then direct delivery of such statement to the defendant for his use. If, pursuant to such procedure, any portion of such statement is withheld from the defendant and the defendant objects to such withholding, and the trial is continued to an adjudication of the guilt of the defendant, the entire text of such statement shall be preserved by the United States and, in the event the defendant appeals, shall be made available to the appellate court for the purpose of determining the correctness of the ruling of the trial judge. Whenever any statement is delivered to a defendant pursuant to this section, the court in its discretion, upon application of said defendant, may recess proceedings in the trial for such time as it may determine to be reasonably required for the examination of such statement by said defendant and his preparation for its use in the trial.

(d) If the United States elects not to comply with an order of the court under paragraph (b) or (c) hereof to deliver to the defendant any such statement, or such portion thereof as the court may direct, the court shall strike from the record the testimony of the witness, and the trial shall proceed unless the court in its discretion shall determine that the interests of justice require that a mistrial be declared.

(e) The term "statement", as used in subsections (b), (c), and (d) of this section in relation to any witness called by the United States, means—

(1) a written statement made by said witness and signed or otherwise adopted or approved by him; or

(2) a stenographic, mechanical, electrical, or other recording, or a transcription thereof, which is a substantially verbatim recital of an oral statement made by said witness to an agent of the Government and recorded contemporaneously with the making of such oral statement.

Rule Involved

SECURITIES & EXCHANGE COMMISSION RULE 133

(Securities Act of 1933 Release No. 3522, October 26, 1954)

Rule 133. Definition for Purposes of Section 5 of "Sale", "Offer", "Offer to Sell", and "Offer for Sale".

For the purposes only of section 5 of the Act, no "sale", "offer", "offer to sell", or "offer for sale" shall be deemed to be involved so far as the stockholders of a corporation are concerned where, pursuant to statutory provisions in the State of incorporation or provisions contained in the certificate of incorporation, there is submitted to the vote of such stockholders a plan or agreement for a statutory merger or consolidation or reclassification of securities, or a proposal for the transfer of assets of such corporation to another person in consideration of the issuance of securities of such other person or voting stock of a corporation which is in control, as defined in Section 368 (c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, of such other person, under such circumstances that the vote of a required favorable majority (1) will operate to authorize the proposed transaction so far as concerns the corporation whose stockholders are voting (except for the taking of action by the directors of the corporation involved and for compliance with such statutory provisions as the filing of the plan or agreement with the appropriate State authority), and (2) will bind all stockholders of such corporation except to the extent that dissenting stockholders may be entitled, under statutory provisions or provisions contained in the certificate of incorporation, to receive the appraised or fair value of their holdings.

Statement of the Case

The mail fraud scheme set forth in Count 2 is based on the defrauding of Texas-Adams stockholders. Although none of the alleged conspirators had any contact with or even knowledge of that corporation until after August 9, 1955 (J. 1337a), the count alleges that the scheme was formed on March 18, 1955 (J. 39a). And the government was permitted to introduce evidence of many collateral matters which transpired in the interval. In effect, the government proved a scheme altogether different from the one charged in the indictment, namely, a plan, as stated by the Court below (infra, 2713) for "the acquisition of control of a publicly held corporation." The distribution scheme which forms the basis of Count 50 is a conspiracy to distribute stock for which no registration statement had been filed, though it should have been.

Crosby, McCarthy, and one Pettit were charged in Count 1 of the indictment with having defrauded the Texas-Adams stockholders by accomplishing the purchase of control by the use of Texas-Adams money (J. 36a-39a) and were convicted (J. 25a). Petitioner was not named in this count (J. 1a). Nevertheless, the evidence and exhibits (e.g. 18A and 18B) relating to these matters were received against him, over objection (J. 157a, 158a, 211a, 331a-333a).

On pre-trial motion and at the trial petitioner moved for dismissal of Counts 2 and 50 for duplicity, repugnancy, and because they failed to satisfy the requirements of Rule 7(c) of the Federal Rules of Criminal procedure that an indictment "shall be a plain, concise and definite written statement of the essential facts constituting the offense charged." The motions were denied.

In the memorandum submitted by the government in opposition to petitioner's pre-trial motion to dismiss the indictment because of the improper inclusion of the Count 1 transactions in the counts relating to him, the government took the position that petitioner had joined the conspiracy "and adopted the acts of the participants in the prior scheme"—to wit, the Count 1 conspiracy scheme. However, no evidence was adduced that petitioner had any knowledge of the improper method of obtaining control of Texas-Adams referred to in that Count, much less that he ever adopted it.

The Government's Opening Statement

The prosecutor (R1-60) promised to prove that petitioner was a member of the Texas-Adams management subsequent to September 22, 1955; that he was responsible for false representations which were made to the public; that he gained control of Texas-Adams in concert with the other individual Count 2 defendants; and that in other transactions alleged to be related to the Texas-Adams conspiracy he reaped a wrongful profit of 1,800,000 shares of stock and embezzled $19,000 (J. 143a-145a). In its supplemental brief in the Court below the government sought to minimize the impact of these charges in the opening by noting that no attempt was made to prove the accusations at the trial. But it did introduce evidence from which an inference could have been drawn of the truth of the charges (see J. 347a, Exhs. 39B1 to B4), and the government left it to petitioner to disprove the same through cross examination (see J. 568a, 569a) and as part of his own case (see J. 1753a, 1759a).

Later discussion of the evidence will show that these were reckless and irresponsible misstatements.

The Evidence

The case against petitioner rested in large part on the testimony of seven co-conspirators (Jannis, Graham, Pittera, Moy, Rosen, Lynch and Kimmes) and at least four other witnesses whose testimony involved perjury. A case resting on such testimony is "weak" as a matter of law. (See cases cited in United States v. Antonelli, 155 F. 2d 631, 646).

Petitioner is a lawyer who was vouched for by an impressive array of character witnesses: Charles Abrams, former Rent Administrator (J. 1799a-1800a); A. Joseph Geist, member of the Board of Higher Education of the City of New York and of the Character Committee in the Second Department (J. 1771a-1776a); William J. Horrigan, of Dean, Magill, Huber & Horrigan (J. 1797a-1798a); Edward F. Huber, of Naylon, Foster, Dean & Aronson (J. 1802a-1804a); Paul D. Miller, of Mudge, Stern, Baldwin & Todd (J. 1794a-1796a); William F. Purcell, of Wein, Lane, Klein & Purcell (J. 1789a-1792a); Nathan Wartels, of Crown Publishers (J. 1792a-1794a); and others (J. 1804a-05a). These witnesses had known petitioner for more than twenty years, except Mr. Miller who had known him only eleven or twelve.

Petitioner had, in the summer of 1955 acted as attorney on behalf of a syndicate headed by defendant William J. McCarthy and three persons not named in the indictment. The syndicate was formed to purchase the very valuable Ajax Oil properties (J. 329a). Petitioner was given "a participation as part payment for his services" (J. 1724a).

The owners of Ajax were willing to accept in payment of the property cash and stock in a company whose stock was readily saleable.

During the course of the Ajax negotiations McCarthy met one Paul R. Jones, named as a co-conspirator (but neither indicted nor called as a witness), who stated in a letter dated July 22, 1958 that, through various companies which he had promoted and controlled, and would promote and control, he could furnish the necessary cash for the Ajax deal (Ex. M55B). In the meantime, the McCarthy syndicate had executed a contract for the acquisition of control of Dumont Marine and Instrument Co. Inc. (Dumont) (Ex. 38).

Thus the means for purchasing the Ajax properties seemed solved.

Jones' center of operations was in Denver, Colorado (J. 381a-3a, 869a) although he lived in Birmingham, Alabama; and the Ajax principal place of business was in Billings, Montana (J. 593a). Jones arranged meetings for McCarthy and Petitioner in Denver with his associates—Holland, President of Homestead (a Jones' controlled company); Branch, its Attorney; and Carroll, its Underwriter, who was also a co-promoter with Jones of Homestead, and the prospective underwriter of the other Jones companies.

The consequence was an agreement (Ex. 38) to merge Homestead with Dumont; acquire the Ajax property in the name of a newly created company to be known as Sundown Oil Company of Colorado; and then to merge Sundown into Dumont. When these arrangements were agreed upon Homestead advanced $50,000.00 for the first down-payment on the anticipated Ajax purchase. Petitioner and McCarthy then went to Billings (J. 593a) and reached an agreement with the Ajax people, after a full disclosure to Ajax' attorney of the arrangements made with Homestead and Dumont to make the purchase with Dumont stock to be used as part of the purchase price (Ex. 47a).

When petitioner arrived back in New York he learned that the Dumont principals had backed out of the deal.

McCarthy then met one Fassoulis (J. 1712a-13a), who represented that he had just completed arrangements to acquire control of a listed public company—Continental Car-Na-Var. Fassoulis and his attorneys, Simpson, Thacher and Bartlett made an independent investigation of the worth of the Ajax properties, and Fassoulis decided to join forces with McCarthy and Jones (J. 1716a-17a; 1727a-8a). Again petitioner went to Denver and Billings and reconstituted the deal with Continental in place of Dumont as the vehicle for the merger. And Fassoulis advanced $50,000.00 (J. 1736a) toward the Ajax purchase. Petitioner then went to Chicago where he met Ajax' attorney, and together they, having been empowered so to do, executed the purchase agreement by which Sundown was to acquire the Ajax properties subject to defeasance in the event of failure to meet the partial payments at the stated intervals provided for in the agreement (J. 574a-5a, 1728a-9a, Exs. 47A and 47B).

But now Jones failed to keep his commitments to McCarthy and Fassoulis (J. 924a-7a, 929a), and a default resulted under the terms of the Ajax agreement in consequence of which Homestead and Fassoulis suffered substantial financial loss; and petitioner the loss of a great deal of time and effort.

So far as petitioner was concerned he had no further interest in the matter. But this was not the end. McCarthy subsequently joined force with defendant Crosby, and they attempted to pick up the Ajax pieces, and thereby hangs the tale; and the subsequent involvement of petitioner in their affairs.

Texas-Adams first came into the picture in August 1955 after one of the convicted defendants, Crosby, and one Rosen, an alleged co-conspirator, had placed an advertisement in the Wall Street Journal seeking to obtain the controlling interest in a publicly held corporation (J. 1337a, 1352a). In this way Crosby and Rosen met defendants Gordon, Goldberg, and Reicher (whose convictions were set aside by the Court below for insufficiency of proof). McCarthy became involved in the purchase which was consummated on September 27, 1955 (J. 185a, 223a, 36a).

After acquiring control of Texas-Adams the Crosby-McCarthy-Pettit group sought, with the aid of Thomas K. Hudson, an officer, director and general counsel to the company, to acquire various properties (J. 885a; 892a; 1166a; 1311a; and 1434a). In the course of this program of acquisition and merger the volume of Texas-Adams stock was greatly increased. The government claimed that some of this stock was issued without consideration, and that much of it was issued under circumstances which required a registration statement. It was conceded that none was ever filed.

Petitioner became one of the New York attorneys for Texas-Adams for a limited purpose on October 19, and again November 1, 1955 (J. 680a-1a, 690a). After November 16, 1955 he acted as attorney for the company in New York (J. 1798a). Thomas K. Hudson, Esq., of Denver, Colorado, was its general counsel (J. 971a). Prior to November, 1955 Texas-Adams was represented in New York by Messrs. Annenberg & Greene and by them alone (J. 851a). They had been defendant Crosby's attorneys for several years prior thereto (J. 835a).

Crosby, McCarthy, and one Pettit were charged in Count 1 of the indictment with having defrauded the Texas-Adams stockholders by accomplishing the purchase of control by the use of Texas-Adams money (J. 36a-39a) and were convicted (J. 25a). Petitioner was not named in this count (J. 1a). Nevertheless, the evidence and exhibits (e.g. 18A and 18B) relating to these matters were received against him, over objection (J. 157a, 158a, 211a, 331a-333a).

According to a memorandum submitted by the government in opposition to petitioner's pre-trial motion to dismiss the indictment because of the improper inclusion of the Count 1 transactions in the counts relating to him, the government took the position that petitioner had joined the conspiracy "and adopted the acts of the participants in the prior sheeme"—to wit, the Count 1 conspiracy. However, no evidence was adduced that petitioner had any knowledge of the improper method of obtaining control of Texas-Adams referred to in that Count, much less that he ever adopted it.

The opinion of the Court below (infra, 2685, 2696) refers to the proof relating to the period "before the principal 'management' defendants obtained control of Texas-Adams", and it discusses the sufficiency of the evidence against petitioner under the heading "The 'Management' Defendants." It thus plainly implies a finding that he was a member of Texas-Adams' management. There is no support in the record for that finding.

On the contrary the record proves: that petitioner was not a party to the "Crosby-McCarthy-Pettit Joint Venture", which contemplated the Count 1 transaction (see Exs. 18A, 18B); that he did not participate in its negotiation or consummation, even as counsel (see J. 181a, 210a, 268a, 282a); that he did not participate as counsel or otherwise in the Osage Mining Company transaction, described by the Court below as "perhaps the most artful example of the McCarthy stewardship of Texas-Adams"; that later when he became counsel for Texas-Adams he challenged the transaction for substantial failure of consideration, and took an adversary position against American Montana (a Crosby-McCarthy controlled company) which had benefited from the transaction (see Ex. M 24B); that he was never an officer or director of Texas-Adams, except only for the single instance when he acted as its signatory officer to protect a $100,000 loan (J. 1460-61a); that he did not initiate or participate in the negotiation of any of Texas-Adams' acquistion transactions: Homestead, (see Ex. 43A), Longview (J. 813-818a, 823a, 831a), Osage (J. 887), Taylorcraft (J. 953a), U. S. Sulpher (J. 1325a), or Comigu (J. 1435a;) and that he did not participate in the preparation or distribution of the brochure or its accompanying financial statements (see J. 1531a, 1533a).

Significant in this connection is the testimony of one Mauro, a government witness (J. 943a), who had dealings with several of the convicted defendants who allegedly represented Texas Adams (J. 947a). He had been given a list of its directors, which did not include petitioner (J. 949a), and he had never heard of petitioner as part of the management (J. 971a). Mauro further testified that his only contact with petitioner was when the latter acted as attorney for Texas-Adams to try to stop the sale of some collateral (J. 983a, 984a). And Jannis, a co-conspirator and a most important government witness, who was the all around handy man for Crosby, and who was used by Crosby and McCarthy as a conduit for the illegal sale of Texas-Adams stock, testified that petitioner was not a member of the controlling group for which he had acted (J. 692a; Ex. 60A).

This but provides a thin background to the case which became more and more complex and confused as the trial unfolded. The evidence overflowed the indictment, and frequently got lost in dead ends.

The Evidence Relating to Petitioner Under Count 2

This mail fraud count (J. 39a-50a) contains 18 alleged misrepresentations with regard to Texas-Adams (J. 47a, 48a). The mailing there referred to was of a Report to Stockholders (J. 49a, 50a). The same report formed the basis for Count 12 (J. 57a), of which petitioner was acquitted (J. 25a).

The report (Ex. 32A Ga & Ex. 106) was mailed by the brokerage concern (Ex. 32E), the members of which were acquitted by the Court below. There was no evidence connecting petitioner with any knowledge of what the report contained. It had been prepared by one Lynch after a draft had been sent (pursuant to McCarthy's instructions), to Annenberg (Texas-Adams' regular counsel) (J. 1526a)) and to defendants Goldberg and Gordon (J. 1486a-1487a).

While the government attempted to link petitioner with a "market letter" through one Robbins (J. 727a), the witness' bias was established on cross-examination (J. 754a-758a). It appeared, moreover, that petitioner was merely present when McCarthy read to himself, and not aloud, Robbins' notes (J. 763a, 764a). However, this market letter was not mailed out (J. 731a). It can have no significance in the case.

The government also sought to connect petitioner with balance sheets included in a brochure (Ex. 32D-1) sent to stockholders (J. 1493a). This formed the basis of Counts 24, 26, 27, 30 and 32 (J. 66a-72a, 236a). But petitioner was acquitted of those counts (J. 25a) while Meredith was found guilty on them (J. 25a). Lynch, who prepared the brochure, said he never conferred with petitioner, and attributed his information to McCarthy, Hudson, Holland, Hershfield, May, and Gully (J. 1490a, 1492a, 1494a-1503a, 1528a-1534a).

Lynch testified that he had sent drafts of the brochure to several persons at the instruction of McCarthy, one of them being Hudson, but that he had sent none to petitioner (J. 1531a).

Lynch testified that he got a copy of the balance sheet (Ex. 97D) from Meredith (J. 1492a) and a later one (Ex. 163B-2) from Lubin, the Texas-Adams accountant (J. 1499a, 1500a). While Lynch testified at first that petitioner came with Lubin to his office, he said there had been no conversation about it then except with McCarthy (J. 1500a, 1501a). Moreover, Lynch had testified before a grand jury (J. 1533a) that it was Meredith who had accompanied Lubin (J. 1534a), and on cross-examination admitted he could not be sure that petitioner had come to his office (J. 1534a).

The connection of petitioner with any scheme to defraud rests, therefore, basically only on his association with McCarthy and his having acted for him in various enterprises. Under such circumstances the various errors we submit were committed at the trial assume decisive importance.

But the government sought to link petitioner to the schemes of Crosby, McCarthy, and Pettit by showing that he had been associated with one or more of them months before Texas-Adams had ever been heard of.

This proof goes to the date March 18, 1955, stated in both Counts 2 and 50 to have been the starting point of the Texas-Adams schemes. But that date, the organization of Homestead Oil and Uranium Co. by Jones, Holland, Branch and Carroll (J. 1540a, 1542a), has no relevance whatever, since none of the alleged conspirators was involved in its organization.

When the Government sought to develop this aspect of the case petitioner's counsel objected, and there was discussion in the absence of the jury (J. 331a-335a). This discussion related to a memorandum which the Government had served in advance in which it claimed that the "Homestead" evidence (which, as it turned out, was destined to take in all the complicated negotiations involving Jones, Carroll, Fassoulis, Stratford Factors, Dumont, Continental Car-Na-Var, Sundown, Holland, Branch, Gold, Ajax and Homestead itself--days and weeks of largely irrelevant and prejudicial evidence), would prove the falsity of at least five of the Texas-Adams alleged subsequent representations; petitioner's involvement in transactions similar to the fraudulent Count 1 transaction, petitioner's motive for joining the Texas-Adams fraudulent scheme, and petitioner's criminal intent.

The memorandum went on to state that "the evidence shows that securing control of Texas-Adams was the consummation of the Mittelman-McCarthy plan to gain control of a company or companies as a vehicle in acquiring Ajax", and that "the evidence will show that this had been their plain design during the summer of 1955."

But that plan is not the scheme alleged in Count 2 nor is it part of the conspiracy alleged in Count 50. It was lawful on its face. It was conceived and pursued before either of them knew that Texas-Adams existed; and therefore it was not and could not have been part of the Count

2 scheme to defraud Texas-Adams stockholders, or the Count 50 conspiracy to issue Texas-Adams stock unlawfully.

And this violent departure from the indictment was adopted in the charge. The Trial Judge told the jury (G. 283a):

> "* * * The Government claims that conspiracy had been formed by some of these defendants, and that their efforts during the summer of 1955 to acquire a vehicle for their purposes had been frustrated."

Petitioner's counsel objected strenuously to the Homestead evidence on the ground that there was no basis for the introduction into the record of testimony relating to transactions antecedent to the acquisition of control of Texas-Adams; that the transactions as alleged in the filed memorandum involved serious charges against petitioner; that such charges were collateral to the issues in the case; they were bound to have serious prejudicial effect; and that no basis for their admission had been shown by the memorandum.

Nonetheless the Government was permitted to proceed.

Do the transactions reflecting the attempts to purchase the Ajax property bear any resemblance to the fraudulent Texas-Adams take-over in design or purpose?

Did petitioner defraud Homestead in any way, and did his actions in connection with Homestead establish motive and intent to join a conspiracy with McCarthy and Crosby?

The answer to the first question depends upon an analysis of the two separate attempts of the McCarthy syndicate to purchase the Ajax property, first through the medium of Dumont and then, when that failed, through the medium of Continental.

The answer to the second question depends upon an analysis of four transactions involving (a) the transmittal of $50,000 to the firm of Parker, Chapin and Flattau; (b) $19,000 to petitioner; the purchase of 1,800,000 shares of Homestead stock by petitioner; and an alleged loan by Homestead of $[illegible],000 to petitioner.

It is plain enough that McCarthy had found a bargain which justified energetic purchase efforts and a substantial resale profit. As Holland admitted, the Bonanza and Poplar Fields were "fabulous". Homestead checked the Ajax properties and "the potential looked very exciting," and "it was a very good deal" which "anyone" would be "anxious to get into" (J. 465a).

In his preliminary negotiation with respect to the purchase to the Ajax property, McCarthy discovered that it was possible to purchase the property with cash and or cash and stock in a company whose stock was readily saleable.

On July 19, 1955, McCarthy's syndicate signed a formal agreement with Stemmler, the President and Chairman of the Board of Dumont, to purchase the controlling block of stock in that company (Ex. 38). The obvious purpose was to have a vehicle capable of issuing shares of stock for part of the purchase price a fact fully disclosed to Stemmler. McCarthy had previously met Pam R. Jones, a named co-conspirator of paramount importance in the Homestead transaction (Exs. MS; G, 537a, 540a, 560a) and the later Osage plot, who was never called to the witness stand by the Government. Jones represented to McCarthy that he was in a position through companies controlled and or which would be controlled by him to furnish the requisite cash for the other part of the purchase price of the Ajax property (Ex. M 55B).

An agreement was then entered into between the Jones and McCarthy interests (Ex. 38). The agreement provided for the creation of a corporation (Sundown) to act on behalf of all the parties in the purchase of the Ajax properties. Sundown was to be a wholly owned subsidiary of Dumont, and Homestead was then to be merged into Sundown. In this agreement and because of it Homestead advanced $50,000 to be used as a down payment on the Ajax purchase by Sundown. A contract was then made between Ajax and Sundown (Ex. 47A) for the purchase of the Ajax properties.

At this point we pause to point it that there was nothing in the arrangements made between Dumont, Homestead and Ajax which in any way contemplated the sale of stock to the public. The transaction was legal in all respects. McCarthy had worked out an ingenious plan to acquire the Ajax properties on terms satisfactory to all the interested parties.

It is obvious that there was nothing about this transaction which in any way resembles the fraudulent takeover of Texas-Adams by McCarthy and Crosby. There is not the slightest indication that the parties contemplated looting the treasury of any of the companies involved in the transaction, or in offering worthless unregistered stocks for sale. Only purblind prospectors, gifted with hindsight could perceive an evil intent in petitioner's activities in preparing the necessary papers in connection with the plan.

When the Dumont transaction failed, McCarthy was able to interest a Mr. Fassoulis in joining forces with him. At that time Fassoulis was negotiating an agreement to purchase control of Continental Car-Na-Var, a company listed on the American Stock Exchange. There then followed negotiations with the end result that agreements were entered into which resulted in the substitution of Continental for Dumont as the vehicle for ultimately acquiring the Ajax property. Both Homestead and Ajax consented to the change and petitioner did the legal work necessary to carry out the agreements among all the parties.

Unfortunately, Mr. Jones was unable to keep his commitments to raise the necessary cash to satisfy all the requirements of the Ajax and Continental acquisition. The result was, that though petitioner had closed an agreement for the purchase of the Ajax property, a default resulted under its terms, and that transaction, likewise, met with failure. Both Fassoulis and Homestead suffered financial loss in consequence, and petitioner had spent and wasted a great deal of his own time in connection with this venture.

It is necessary to point out again that there is not the slightest evidence in any of the agreements entered into between Homestead, Continental and Ajax, which contemplated the sale of stock to a deluded public for the purpose of acquiring the Ajax property.

We turn now to an analysis of the activities of petitioner which the Government said proves motive and intent:

(a) The alleged misappropriation of the $50,000. It will be recalled that on July the 22nd, 1955 in connection with the first trip to Billings, Homestead advanced $50,000 to Sundown which was deposited in a Billings bank subject to withdrawal by Holland and petitioner.

Subsequently, when Fassoulis joined the venture and it was necessary by reason of the time schedule to pay $50,- 000 on account of the Ajax purchase agreement, he wired the funds to petitioner in Chicago upon the express understanding that the money would be returned to him by Homestead to make a payment on account of the Continental Car-Na-Var acquisition. Accordingly, Holland himself wired the funds at the request of Fassoulis to Parker, Chapin and Flattau, New York attorneys who were representing the controlling stock interest in Continental Car-Na-Var (J. 483a, Ex. 40B1; Exs. 40B2, 3 and 4; and Ex. 40B5, J. 484a).

(b) With regard to the $19,000. On August the 25th 1955, in consequence of urgent demand from Fassoulis, Homestead wired to petitioner $19,000 in order to help Fassoulis repay the $50,000 which he had borrowed in connection with the Continental Car-Na-Var acquisition. Pursuant to Fassoulis' instructions, petitioner turned over $15,000 to the lender who was pressing Fassoulis (J. 1753a; Exs. 39B1, 2 and 3). These facts were within the knowledge of the prosecution, or they could have been easily ascertained. Instead it was made to appear in the prosecutor's opening, and in the manner in which the case was presented to the jury, that petitioner had misappropriated this money.

(c) The alleged embezzlement of the 1,800,000 shares of Homestead stock. After the Dumont transaction had failed of consummation, the syndicate evolved a means by which it was hoped that the balance of the Homestead shares then unsold could be marketed. It was important and necessary from the standpoint of the Homestead group that the regulation A issue be terminated and a final report submitted to the S. E. C. To do this it was necessary to either abandon all efforts to sell the unsold shares, and to file a report to that effect; or, to close out the issue by means of a sale. The latter course was pursued. And while petitioner was in Denver Carroll arranged that petitioner borrow from himself and from one Gold, a friend of his $90,000 in order to purchase the 1,800,000 shares of Homestead stock still unsold at the issuance price of .05c per share. The loan was made, the stock purchased and upon receipt of the proceeds of the purchase Homestead in turn loaned the $90,000 to petitioner to repay Carroll and his friend Gold (J. 538a-9a, 559a-63a).

This was all done because Jones, McCarthy and Fassoulis were certain that they could sell the 1,800,000 shares of stock in Birmingham, where Jones resided, and in New York where Fassoulis had his connections.

And so with full knowledge on the part of all the parties (J. 561a), petitioner left Denver for Birmingham and delivered 500,000 shares of the Homestead stock to Jones (J. 1741a) which he agreed to sell and to remit the proceeds of the sale to petitioner to repay Homestead (J. 1741a, 1745a-6a, Ex. M 55D). Petitioner returned to New York with 1,300,000 shares which he turned over to Fassoulis for sale (Ex. M 55D). Jones could not sell the 500,000 shares in Birmingham and returned them to McCarthy. Fassoulis, instead of selling the shares as he had agreed to do, pledged them as security for a loan from Stratford Factors, and thus the matter stood at the time the Ajax deal collapsed. Subsequently petitioner recovered the shares from Stratford Factors and turned them over to McCarthy.

Here again petitioner was compelled to go to great extremes to demonstrate that he had in no wise violated the trust reposed in him by his clients.

The suggestion, therefore, that petitioner was motivated by fear of criminal prosecution by Homestead is absurd.

This completes the Homestead story in so far as it meets the Government's alleged justification for its admission.

What is important to note here is that there was no evidence of probative value connecting petitioner's efforts with Texas-Adams and the Count 1 scheme. None of his communications to Homestead during that month of September mentioned Texas-Adams (Exs. 42A; B1-5 and C); and Ajax's attorney testified that he never heard of Texas-Adams until he met McCarthy and Hudson in Denver on October 11, 1955 (J. 600a-1a).

The Evidence Under Count 50

Petitioner's principal connection with the alleged conspiracy to market stock consisted of opinion letters he wrote in connection with the Empire Drilling Company, Comigu, U. S. Sulphur Co. and Jannis transactions. They stated that the various proposed stock issues were exempt from registration requirements.

There were two Empire opinion letters. The first (Ex. 136B, E. A. 406) was based on a contract (Ex. 130-C) which contemplated a deal whereby Texas-Adams was to purchase the assets of Empire for 150,000 shares and to issue additional shares to creditors and interest holders. The second (Ex. 143-D, E. A. 506) dealt particularly with these latter. While, in fact, Texas-Adams acquired Empire stock and not its assets, there is no evidence that petitioner knew, when he wrote his first letter, that there was going to be any change. And while there may be difference of opinion as to the technical correctness of the second opinion, it was not unreasonable for petitioner to believe that the stock issued to the interest holders would be freely transferable since at that time (before SEC v.

Culpepper, 270 F. 2d 241, 247-248) shares issued under Rule 133 were not considered restricted.

With respect to Comigu, petitioner wrote an opinion letter on the basis of the acquisition of assets (Ex. 168-B, E. A. 606). His views are confirmed by a letter written by one Gully to Hudson on February 1, 1956 (Gully Ex. 55a) (Gully was the seller and was acquitted—J. 25a) and by a Texas-Adams resolution (Ex. 168-C). Indeed, the Court below conceded that the Rule 133 exemption "probably" fit that situation (infra, 2700).

The U. S. Sulphur opinion letter (Ex. 148-B, E. A. 52b) was based on information obtained from Hudson. This transaction was negotiated in Denver by Hudson and McCarthy (J. 1325a-1330a). There is no basis for an inference that petitioner knowingly participated in any fraud. The Court below, however, stressed as "particularly damning" (infra, 2698) petitioner's letter of April 30, 1955 stating that 150,000 shares of Texas-Adams were being issued to a Canadian corporation in part payment of the purchase price of U. S. Sulphur. The fact is that Texas-Adams' directors adopted a resolution for the issuance of these shares to L. W. Limited (Ex. 148-C).

That corporation had been organized by Rosen (mentioned above in connection with Crosby) for a purpose wholly unconnected with Texas-Adams (J. 1379a, 1380a). When the purpose failed petitioner asked for the use of the corporation for his clients (J. 1381a). The record showed no disposition of these shares by L. W. Limited (J. 1591a) so that their issuance did not in any way contribute to any distribution scheme.

Harry A. Hershfield, U. S. Sulphur's president and one of its two stockholders, denied knowledge of or participation in this transaction (J. 1246a). But cross-examination revealed him as a swindler and liar unworthy of belief (J. 1317a-36a). And the following facts impugn his denial:

First: At the time of Texas-Adams' initial purchase in February U. S. Sulphur was negotiating for additional and, Hershfield claimed, immensely valuable sulphur properties (J. 1323a, Ex. 147B, third page).

Second: These additional properties were not covered by the initial purchase agreement (Exs. 15A and B).

Those facts support two alternative inferences, consistent with the good faith of petitioner's opinion: that U. S. Sulphur transferred or purported to transfer additional mining claims as consideration, and that L. W. Limited was its nominee for tax or other purposes; or that Hudson and McCarthy made false representations to that effect.

Finally, there is the matter of George Jannis. Petitioner wrote three opinion letters on October 20 and November 1, 1955 (Ex. 56E, E. A. 20b; Ex. 57E, E. A. 22b; Ex. 57G, E. A. 24b). The first two justified the transfer of Texas-Adams stock in payment for loans and services. There was no evidence that petitioner knew the first two letters were based on falsehoods. Indeed the record supports the contrary.

It suffices to say now that the evidence proved: that Jannis was falsely represented as a Greek shipping magnate (J. 680a, et seq.; 876a, et seq.) that he signed the fraudulent documents mentioned in Exs. 56E and 57E; that the petitioner discovered his deception on November 3; that his subsequent conduct was consistent with his claim of good faith; and that he did not participate in or profit from Crosby's conversion of the 52,000 shares issued for merger purposes with Homestead (J. 1475a-9a; Exs. 60A and B).

The third dealt with the 1,300,000 shares of Homestead which had been issued to petitioner at the time of the Homestead negotiations (Ex. 45A, E, F) but which had been turned over to Fassoulis who had advanced a large amount of money (J. 1742a, 1759a, 1763a), in connection with the Homestead-Ajax transaction Fassoulis had wrongfully pledged these shares to Stratford Factors (Exs. 56E, 57E and 57G). Ultimately the stock was turned over to Meredith on McCarthy's instructions (Ex. 59C) after petitioner had recovered them from Stratford. Petitioner was acting on instructions of McCarthy and Hudson and recognized that they were entitled to dispose of the shares (See Ex. 59B, 59C). The naming of Jannis as the vehicle for their convenience was irrelevant.

It is significant, also, that petitioner was acquitted under Count 43 (J. 25a) which was expressly based on the Jannis stock (Ex. 191C). The Court below stressed the fact that petitioner sold stock for his sister which was in Jannis' name "long after he concededly knew the truth about Jannis" (infra, 2698). Those shares were part of Stratford's collateral, and it was threatening to exercise its clear right of sale; petitioner merely acted as Stratford's agent, to assure orderly liquidation; he told Stratford he would so through a nominee; and the proceeds were remitted to Stratford (J. 1477a-1479a).

The evidence showed that Crosby converted the 52,000 shares of Texas-Adams stock issued as above related. But petitioner did not participate in or profit by Crosby's conversion of the shares.

The Carroll Testimony

It has been established, has it not, that McCarthy could not have heard of Texas-Adams prior to August 9th (J. 1337a, 1352a, Gordon Ex. 18a) and he probably did not hear of it from Crosby until sometime later. The date was not important to the prosecution's case against McCarthy because it had established beyond peradventure that McCarthy had joined forces with Crosby in the take-over of Texas-Adams, and was a principal in the Count 1 fraud. In addition, he had pleaded guilty on the third day of the trial.

But would it not nail petitioner if it could be established that he had known of Texas-Adams during the Homestead negotiations? The courtroom drama and atmosphere must not be disregarded. A jury does not get the evidence in orderly fashion. Witnesses come and go; memory is short and grows hazy as time marches on, and facts do not always drop into their proper slots.

And so the witness Carroll is called to the witness stand presumably to testify in regard to the Homestead evidence. Under the expert guidance of the prosecutor he blandly testifies that at two meetings, one in New York and one in Denver (J. 523a-4a), McCarthy in the presence of petitioner told him that Texas-Adams was one of three companies that he controlled, and could merge it with Homestead.

The prosecutor knew this could not be true, and in the court below the government conceded that the testimony was "unquestionably wrong." And Carroll had been before the Grand Jury and had been interviewed by the prosecutor who had taken copious notes which were not made available to the defense. There can't be any question but that the prosecutors knew what Carroll's testimony was going to be.

The evidence bore on a vital issue in the case. How this and other prejudicial testimony affected the jury's judgment will never be known. But speculation is not due process when error prejudice and prosecution misconduct is so clear.

(Carroll's testimony will be found in the joint appendix at 518a; 520a; 522a. 523a, and 524a.)

The Trial Court's Attitude

Against this background the hostile attitude of the Trial Court toward petitioner's trial counsel assumes transcendent importance. This manifested itself early in the course of the trial and continued to the very end.

The Trial Court early in the trial, because of petitioner's trial counsel's exception to the tone used by the Court in an admonition (J. 448a, 449a), fined him $500 for contempt of Court, payable the next day, and threatened a remand (J. 449a).*

Other incidents were: arbitrary termination of cross-examination, and dismissal of an important government witness from Colorado (J. 561a-567a); violent insistence on cross-examination of another government witness from Colorado regarding the contents of certain exhibits before they were offered and received in evidence, and even after they were offered by the government and excluded upon objection by other defense counsel (J. 1227a-1233a); oppressive compulsion to study voluminous statements produced pursuant to 18 U. S. C. 3500 in the presence of the jury (J. 1033a-1036a, 1041a); adverse reflection on defense exhibits by receiving them without a glance (e.g.,

* The next day other counsel asked that the matter be reconsidered (J. 467a). Upon renewal later in the trial and after a statement by petitioner's counsel, the court withdrew the finding (J. 675a, 676a).

J. 1189a-1190a); unjust imputation of trickery in the formulation of questions addressed to an undisputed fact and obviously innocent of improper motive (J. 236a); harassing criticism of the quality, scope and length of important cross-examinations (J. 544a, 558a, 564a-567a, 1199a-1200a, 1202a-1204a, 1216a-1218a); numerous instances of unprovoked, angry and derogatory incivility; the request that petitioner's counsel "go at (his exceptions) fast," immediately after delivery of the charge at high speed for approximately 7½ hours, and without any opportunity for preparatory study (J. 1847a); and the flat refusal to hear any request to charge "if it has any reference to the facts," followed by total refusal to hear petitioner's counsel any further (J. 1847a-1848a, 1852a).

In addition an occasion arose where petitioner's counsel asked for a postponement of his cross-examination of the witness Rosen so that he could examine about 200 pages of grand jury testimony given by Rosen (J. 1358a). The Court suggested that the minutes be examined during the luncheon recess (J. 1359a). After that recess counsel stated that he had been unable to examine the minutes adequately (J. 1360a, 1361a). He suggested that Rosen be replaced by some witnesses from Colorado whose testimony would be brief, and the cross-examination resumed the next day (J. 1362a). The Court insisted on the minutes being read then and there (J. 1363a). During the course of the discussion the Court spoke of "baiting" on the part of counsel for Crosby and other defense counsel (J. 1364a). When counsel for this petitioner remonstrated on the reflection on his good faith as the first time such criticism had been made as to him by any court (J. 1364a) the Court replied "an investigation having to do with other members of this Court does not bear that out to be true" (J. 1365a).

How could petitioner have a fair trial under such circumstances?

The McCarthy Guilty Plea

Three days after the trial commenced defendant McCarthy pleaded guilty in the absence of the jury (J. 165a-169a, 196a-206a). Counsel for petitioner moved for a mistrial on the ground that what had occurred would prejudice his client (J. 204a). The Court denied the motion, but pointed out the "responsibility that goes with a free press" and said he would instruct "the jury not to read anything in the papers" (J. 205a). After acceptance of the plea counsel for various defendants, including counsel for petitioner, moved for a mistrial (J. 207a, 208a). Counsel for the government stated that the Court would admonish the jury not to read about the case in the newspapers or listen on the radio or television about it (J. 208a).

At the close of that day the Court instructed the jury not to read or listen or talk with anyone about the case (J. 227a). Counsel for petitioner then asked the Court to inquire on the following morning whether the jury had in fact heard anything, pointing out that it might be "unavoidable" that they had (J. 227a, 228a). Other counsel then objected and the Court declined to make the inquiry stating that it would cover the matter in its charge (J. 228a.). In the charge the Court said only that McCarthy was no longer in the case (G. 161a) and that guilt was personal (G. 331a).

In fact the Court's admonition was not heeded. The jurors did read the papers and listen to the radio and clippings were brought into the jury room (J. 1878a). Photostats of reports in the Times, Tribune, World Telegram and Journal-American are reproduced in the record (J. 1897a). The headlines in the World Telegram and Tribune feature McCarthy's plea.

The facts with reference to the jury's knowledge were learned from a chance meeting between petitioner's trial counsel and one of the jurors (J. 1878a). The juror stated that the jurors believed that McCarthy "had in effect said the other defendants were also guilty" and that his plea had prejudiced them (J. 1878a). On the basis of this statement counsel for petitioner moved for a new trial (J. 26a, 1876a-1897a). The motion was denied (J. 33a).

The Court below considered this subject at length in its opinion. It said that the plea itself formed no basis for a mistrial since the jury was properly instructed (infra, 2719) and that the motion made after verdict was properly denied because the effect on the jurors of what they had read and heard could not be considered (infra, 2720). Marshall v. United States, 360 U. S. 310, was distinguished on the ground that the matter there improperly before the jury was "too inflammatory not to have affected the Jury" (infra, 2721) and that knowledge of the McCarthy plea was not of that character, largely because it might have been taken in the jury's presence (infra, 2722).

The Acquittal of the Broker Defendants

Petitioner in his application to the Court below for rehearing raised a new issue, occasioned by that Court's dismissal of the indictment against the three broker defendants. Pointing out that prejudicial evidence had been introduced that would not have been admissible had these defendants not been charged as co-conspirators, he contended that a new trial was imperative. The Court below ignored the contention in denying the application for rehearing.

One of the items of evidence which was bound to have a prejudicial effect on the jury had to do with matters which had no relation whatever to the schemes referred to either in Count 2 or Count 50, but which indicated that the brokers had been involved in some difficulty with the S. E. C. in connection with the disposition by the brokers of the controlling stock of Texas-Adams which they had acquired (see J. 173a-76a, Exs. 9C and 9F1 and testimony of Frumberg R. 188ff). This evidence had been received over objection by petitioner's counsel "subject to connection" (J. 176a).

In the Court below the government took the position that the evidence was offered for the "limited purpose of establishing the brokers' knowledge" (Supp. Brief 26). But at the trial government counsel claimed it was knowledge "communicated to the defendants" (J. 175a, 176a). And the Court included this episode as evidence "that all of the defendants" knew these matters (J. 278a).

Still another item of evidence in the record because of these broker defendants in the case as co-conspirators involves the use of the Texas Adams seal by the Crosby group before it actually acquired control. The seal was necessary to accomplish the illegal acquisition purpose, and the government contended that it was fair to assume that the Gordon group had made the seal available (J. 138a-39a; J. 213a). As to this the Court below said:

> "The evidence that the buyers used a Texas-Adams' seal in implementation of the take-over fraud is far too weak a base from which to infer guilty knowledge on the part of these defendants. The gaps are too broad and substantial. To hold the defendants on this evidence, it must be inferred that it was 'the' seal, rather than a facsimile, that was used by Crosby * * *" (pp. 270-71).

It is not necessary that we quarrel with the Court below in its interpretation of the fact. But this matter was submitted to the jury for determination, and it is impossible to say how they reacted to the evidence which the government contended proved that the Gordon group aided the Count 1 defendants to defraud Texas-Adams in order to get paid for the controlling block of stock.

The Greenberg episode discussed (infra, p. 57), would not have occurred but for the presence of the three brokers as alleged co-conspirators.

The government's case against the brokers was built on a series of circumstances. The Court below rationalized each fact into immateriality. It is not necessary to say that the Court below was wrong. Assuming it was right, the fact remains that the testimony was extremely prejudicial to petitioner.

The Court below said, in discussing the broker defendants and it is worth repeating (infra, 2706-7):

> "It is always a difficult task in a complicated omnibus conspiracy case like this one to decide at what point the government has produced enough evidence against individual defendants to put their fates in the hands of the jury. Because of the tremendous potential for collateral prejudice inherent in these cases, however, the courts must be extremely scrupulous in sorting out the evidence against single defendants and weighing the same—divorced from the all too often damning influence of the background conspiracy. The case against these three defendants presents a peculiarly difficult problem in this regard because the prime issue is one of guilty knowledge and criminal intent. It is undisputed that the brokers' acts in fact furthered the conspiracy; the claim is persuasively made, however, that they were merely 'doing business as usual' and, to their best knowledge, according to acceptable standards of that business.

> The statutory and administrative regulatory scheme over this area is far from a model of clarity such a situation is aggravated when, as here, criminal liability is based on the failure to comply with the law."

Reasons for Allowing the Writ

1. The Court below, in sustaining the failure to dismiss Counts 2 and 50 for duplicity and repugnancy decided important questions of federal criminal law which deprived petitioner of his constitutional right to be "informed of the nature and cause of the accusation against him, and arrogated to the Courts and the Government the right to accuse petitioner of a crime—the exclusive function of the Grand Jury.

2. The Court below has decided important questions of federal criminal law in conflict with principles set forth by this Court in Kottakos v. United States, 328 U. S. 750, by upholding the validity of Counts 2 and 50 of the indictment notwithstanding the inclusion in each of them of prejudicial allegations relating to a scheme wholly unrealted to the basic schemes set forth in those counts and one with which this petitioner had no connection.

3. The Court below has decided an important question of federal criminal law which has not been and should be passed upon by this Court by its ruling that a criminal prosecution may be maintained for violation of the Securities Act of 1933 notwithstanding the vagueness of the term "public offering" contained in Section 4 (1) of that Act (15 U. S. C. 77d).

4. The acquittal of petitioner under Count 12 and his conviction under Count 2, both involving identical mailings, call for a consideration by this Court of the applicability to the case at bar of Dunn v. United States, 284 U. S. 390.

5. The Court below has decided an important question in the administration of federal criminal justice in conflict with the rationale of the decision of this Court in Jencks v. United States, 353 U. S. 657, and has interpreted 18 U. S. C. 3500 in a manner which opens the door to its nullification so that the matter should be passed upon by his Court.

6. The court below in sustaining the Trial Court's charge relating to character evidence has decided an important question of Federal Criminal Law. The Trial Court's charge invited the jury to consider facts not in evidence, and to speculate as to whether the character witness may not have been deceived by petitioner as to his true character, and warned the jury that the character witnesses were not themselves vouching for petitioner's good character, and in other respects was in conflict with the decision of this court in Edgerton v. United States, 164 U. S. 361.

7. The Court below, in refusing a rehearing after its reversal of the conviction of three of the defendants and the dismissal of the case as to them, has ignored principles stated by this Court because prejudicial evidence was received against petitioner which would not have been admissible had these three defendants not been charged as co-conspirators.

8. Under all the circumstances of this case—including prejudicial statements by the prosecutor in his opening, the hostility of the Trial Court toward petitioner's counsel, the use of testimony by the prosecutor which he knew to be erroneous and later, but not before the jury, conceded to be such, the cross-examination by the prosecutor of one of his own witnesses, the receipt in evidence of a mass of unrelated testimony, particularly that relating to the Count 1 scheme with which petitioner was not connected, and the misconduct of the jury in relation to the McCarthy guilty plea—petitioner's trial was so unfair as to call for review by this Court.

Supporting Argument

I

Since petitioner was convicted only under Counts 2 and 50 we shall deal only with them. Count 2 charges the use of the mails in a scheme to defraud, primarily by the sale of stock of Texas-Adams upon misrepresentations of its value (J. 39a-50a). Count 50 charges a conspiracy to distribute stock which should have been registered with the S. E. C. but was not (J. 87a-95a). But into each of these counts certain of the allegations of Count 1 were incorporated (J. 40a, 88a). This count charged the use of an interstate wire message in a scheme to take over Texas-Adams by using its own funds for the purpose (J. 36a-39a). Petitioner was not charged with participation in that scheme. Yet the allegation from Count 1 included in the other two counts is that these unlawful means were used (by others than petitioner) to obtain control of that company (J. 37a-38a).

The issue of duplicity raised the basic question whether or not the Grand Jury intended to accuse petitioner Mittelman of participation in the Count 1 scheme, all of the essential allegations of which are realleged by reference in paragraph 2 of Count 2.

Contrary to the suggestion of the Court below (infra, 2710) this objection was in no sense technical, nor did it rest on any desire for needless repetition.

Article 6 of the Amendments to the Constitution of the United States provides the inflexible rule that in all criminal proceedings the accused must "be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation" made against him. No one can say that the indictment in this case is informative in that regard.

In substance Count 1 charges a scheme to obtain control of Texas-Adams in fraud of its then existing stockholders by using the funds of the corporation improperly.

Count 2 charges a scheme to defraud future purchasers by putting out false statements about Texas-Adams.

Count 50 charges a scheme to violate the Securities Act by selling securities without registering.

The Count 1 scheme is entirely separate from the others. There was no reason whatever for incorporating the gist of Count 1 in the other counts except with intent to prejudice. Had the persons charged in all the counts been the same it might be possible to argue that no harm was done. But since petitioner was not charged in Count 1, that contention is not possible. He necessarily was harmed by being linked with the Count 1 scheme by the back door, so to speak, and having all the evidence relating to it considered by the jury against him despite the fact that there was not a scrap of evidence that he had any connection with it whatever.

Moreover, the Count 1 scheme was completed before any of the acts which form the basis of the Counts 2 and 50 schemes were performed—before any mailings were had. And it affected a different class of persons who were not affected by the other two schemes.

In seeking to escape the horn of repugnancy the Government admitted in its opposing memorandum on the pretrial motion that there were two schemes, saying that after the Count 1 scheme was completed "Additional persons joined together in a new scheme" with new objectives. The Government claimed that the new parties adopted the earlier scheme, but of that there was no proof.

This admission of duplicity was, or should have been conclusive. And, respecting the question of intended meaning, presumably the draftsmen of the indictment then knew what they intended to allege and what the Grand Jury understood it to mean.

The Court below held (infra, 2712-2713) that repugnancy was not involved in this case because the "takeover scheme charged in the First Count was a localized short-lived offense" having its origination on July 1, 1955 and completed in September of 1955, whereas the "grand scheme" charged in Count 2 "was of much longer duration" (originating on March 18, 1955 and continuing to the date of the indictment) and encompassed a much broader scope of activity—including the acquisition of control of a public company. This reasoning escapes us completely.

In the Court below the indictment was also upheld by the cavalier statement that there really couldn't be such a thing as duplicity in mail fraud indictments. But we submit that the cases cited do not justify the conclusion.

In United States v. Colson, 145 F. 2d 82, the indictment charged a single scheme to sell oil interests by various frauds. The proof showed two groups, one in New York, the other in Boston. But the conviction was upheld because the two groups acted together on numerous occasions. The essential difference between that case and the case at bar is that the overall scheme was one to defraud by the sale of stock and other interests and that the two groups acted continuously to that end. But here the Count 1 scheme to use the corporate funds for control had no relation to the scheme to defraud by sales which is the gist of Count 2, nor to the scheme to sell unregistered stock which underlies Count 50. Moreover, as already noted, the Count 1 scheme was completed before either of the other schemes could begin.

The Weiss, McAlpine, and Owens cases (122 F. 2d 675; 129 F. 2d 737, and 221 F. 2d 351) go no further than to hold that where a single scheme is charged various means may be set forth without duplicity. But there must be a connecting element in those means. And no such element appears to connect the use of Texas-Adams funds with the later fraudulent or illegal sales.

This Court has, in Kotteakos v. United States, 328 U. S. 750, made it clear that it is improper to combine unrelated schemes. Here there is need to pass on the applicability of that rule.

II

Another aspect of the sufficiency of the indictment is its reliance, in Count 50, on the charge that securities would be sold in violation of law without the filing of a registration statement (J. 88a). Involved in this is the application of the exemption under Section 4 (1) of the Securities Act of 1933 [15 U. S. C. §77d]. It exempts transactions "not involving any public offering". The term "public offering" is nowhere defined.

Petitioner contended in arrest of judgment (J. 1859a) that this language was so vague that no criminal prosecution could be based on acts claimed to violate the law.

The Court below (infra, 2726) rejected that claim on the ground that this Court had sufficiently defined the term in S. E. C. v. Ralston Purina Co., 346 U. S. 119.

It should be pointed out, however, that this was a civil case and that the question of the applicability of that definition to criminal prosecutions has not been passed on by this Court.

If a penal act of Congress is so drawn as to make it really difficult to say what was intended and what facts come within it, the statute should not be extended by legal alchemy to supply what is omitted. McBoyle v. United States, 283 U. S. 25; United States v. Resnick, 299 U. S. 207; United States v. Cardiff, 344 U. S. 174; Bell v. United States, 349 U. S. 81.

III

Petitioner in the Court below claimed that his conviction under Count 2 should be reversed because the jury had acquitted him under Count 12.

As already noted, each of these counts was based on the same alleged fraudulent scheme and the mailing of the same Report to Stockholders (J. 49a-50a; 57a). The only difference was the name of the person to whom the Report was sent and the date of the mailing. But both were part of a single mailing operation conducted by the brokerage concern (J. 1214a, 1310a, 1515a). These two counts were coupled by the Trial Court in its charge (G. 235a).

The Court below (infra, 2726) rejected this contention on the basis of Dunn v. United States, 284 U. S. 390, saying that petitioner's contention "is completely without support in logic or precedent".

We submit that the Dunn case does not require the result here reached or, if it be so interpreted, that it should be overruled. Surely there is no lack of "logic" in the contention that an acquittal on one count vitiates a conviction on another when the issues submitted to the jury were, to all intents and purposes, identical. And ample precedent for that proposition existed prior to this Court's ruling in Dunn.

In Murphy v. United States (8th Cir.), 18 F. 2d 509, the authorities were reviewed. The Third and Eighth Circuits had ruled that a guilty verdict in such situation could be upheld only if it rested on evidence other than that on which the government relied in connection with the acquitted count: John Hohenadel Brewing Co. v. United States, 295 F. 489; Peru v. United States, 4 F. 2d 881-884. See also United States v. Woodell, 285 F. 2d 316, 317 (4th Cir.), stating that there had been "abundant authority" for that proposition. The Second and Sixth Circuits had held otherwise: Steckler v. United States, 7 F. 2d 59; Gozner v. United States, 9 F. 2d 603. And see Macklin v. United States, 79 F. 2d 756 (9th Cir.).

Since Dunn the problem continues to give the courts concern. In United States v. Maybury, 274 F. 2d 899, the Second Circuit refused to give a judge the same power of inconsistency which it had consistently allowed to juries. In other recent cases the Court of Appeals, while relying on Dunn, also went to some pains to point out that there was no actual inconsistency in the verdict. See Blumenfeld v. United States, 285 F. 2d 46, 55 (8th Cir.).

While the statement in Dunn that there need not be consistency has apparently been enthroned into a fixed rule, we do not believe that the holding in Dunn requires such a result. For there the evidence permitted a finding of guilt with respect to the maintenance of a nuisance, even though the jury felt it did not permit a finding of guilt with respect to possession or sale of the liquor. But here there is no possibility that the jury could rationally have convicted under Count 2 when they acquitted under Count 12. Petitioner's connection with the mailings was the same they could be attributed to him only by reason of other matters. Moreover, the jury convicted certain of the defendants under Count 12 (J. 25a), thus finding that the mailing there referred to had taken place.

We submit that the case at bar calls for a reconsideration of Dunn.

IV

It developed on numerous occasions during the trial that the prosecutor had interviewed prospective witnesses, made notes of some of the things said, transferred the notes, with other matter, to the so-called "witness sheets" and then destroyed the notes (see J. 405a-447a). In other instances the notes themselves were preserved (see J. 535a). As Mr. Lankenau, a government prosecutor, testified, most of the notes consisted of what the interviewed person had said (J. 423a). The Trial Court refused all requests for production either of the notes or the witness sheets on the ground that they were not of the character of statement described in the "Jencks" Act (18 U. S. C. 3500) (J. 374a-5a). The Court below affirmed (infra, 2724) on the authority of Palermo v. United States, 360 U. S. 343.

We do not believe that this Court, in Palermo, intended to sanction a practice which would defeat the salutary rule it laid down in the case that brought about the enactment of the law, Jencks v. United States, 353 U. S. 657. The underlying purpose of the rule there laid down by this Court was to enable the defense in a criminal prosecution to ascertain whether testimony given by a witness at the trial was inconsistent with what he had previously told agents of the government. It so happened that in Jencks the witnesses involved were informers who had submitted both written and oral reports. This Court ruled that the defense was entitled to see the written reports and the records made of the oral reports. The basis for the decision was that "Justice requires no less" (p. 669).

In Palermo the defense was given the transcript of the witness' questioning by the Internal Revenue Service and a supplementary affidavit made by him. It was, however, denied access to a summary prepared by an agent of a conference at which the affidavit had been executed. This Court, considering only the statute, held that the memorandum in question had been properly refused. Mr. Justice Frankfurter noted (360 U. S. at 352) that the statute was designed to cover more than automotic reproductions of oral statements, but held that only those statements need be produced which could be called the witness' own words.

But, as pointed out in Mr. Justice Brennan's concurring opinion (id. at 361, 362), many situations can be envisioned in which a memorandum of a conference might not be in the words of the persons interviewed, might be selective, and might contain other matter, yet which dealt so specifically with a vital point in the case that the statement should be available to the defense. And he pointed out that grave constitutional issues might arise under the Sixth Amendment should a statute be interpreted so narrowly as to interfere with a proper defense.

In the case at bar, we submit, this situation has arisen. Here the defense was, with some exceptions (see J. 406a) unable to obtain any statements made by witnesses. Yet the witnesses had been interviewed. The defense had no opportunity to show that in these pre-trial interviews statements were made inconsistent with the testimony. Moreover, the destruction of the original material has deprived even the Court of an opportunity to ascertain the extent to which it might have come within the statute. If the practice here pursued be approved, then the defense would be left completely in the dark and the door opened wide for changes of stories by witnesses without any risk of detection. Surely that is not a compliance with the requirements of justice stressed in Jencks.

These observations derive even greater force here in view of the completely unjustified practice so often followed by the prosecutor of destroying the original notes.

The problem can be sharply focussed in relation to a particular aspect of the trial. Carroll, as already noted, testified to two meetings in July 1955 at which petitioner had been present and at which Texas-Adams had been mentioned as one of several companies controlled by McCarthy (J. 520a, 524a). This testimony was incorrect since Texas-Adams had not yet been known to the McCarthy group (see J. 1337a, 1352a). And in the Court below—but not before the jury—the government admitted that Carroll had been "unquestionably wrong." Now Carroll had been interviewed by one of the prosecutors who took notes that were marked Court's Ex. 7-B for identification (J. 535a). But their production was refused (J. 536a).

Now suppose that in those notes a statement appeared, in whatever form, that there had been no reference to Texas-Adams on those occasions. Should not the defense have had an opportunity to have that brought to the jury's attention either by questioning Carroll or by putting the interviewer on the stand? And it should make no difference that the notes might contain other material which constituted lawyers' work product. Such material could easily be covered over by the Trial Court.

We submit that a serious question arises for consideration by this Court, both under the statute and under the Sixth Amendment.

V

Petitioner, as already noted, produced character evidence which the Court below called "an impressive array" (infra, 2698). The Trial Court had referred to this in the early portion of its charge as follows:

> "There has been testimony as to the previous good character of the defendant Mittelman. You should consider such evidence of good character, together with all the other facts and all the other evidence in determining his guilt or innocence. Evidence of good character may, in itself, create a reasonable doubt where, without such evidence, no reasonable doubt would exist.
>
> "But if from all the evidence you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that Mittelman is guilty, a showing that he previously enjoyed a reputation of good character does not justify or excuse the offense, and you should not acquit him merely because you believe that he has been a person of good repute.
>
> "It may be that those with whom he had come in contact previously have been misled, or that he did not reveal to them his real character or acts.
>
> "The testimony of a character witness is not to be regarded by you as expressing the witness' personal opinion of Mittelman's character, nor is it to be taken by you as the witness' opinion as to his guilt or innocence.

"The guilt or innocence of Mittelman is for you, and you alone, to determine" (G. 160a, 161a).

The Court below upheld this charge as a correct instruction "on the role of character evidence as going to prove community attitudes rather than personal belief" (infra, 2717).

We submit that the actual charge was not as paraphased by the Court below.

It may be true that it has become the rule, much criticized by Wigmore (4th Ed., Secs. 1981, 1982, 1986) that the personal opinion of the witness as to the reputation of the accused may not be directly sought. But it does not follow that the jury is foreclosed from assuming, as it most surely normally does, that the witness is of necessity merging his personal opinion into the community view.

In the Court below the government relied on Michelson v. United States, 335 U. S. 469, as sustaining the Trial Court's charge. It should be recalled, however, that in that case this Court was not considering the propriety of any charge, but of a question on the cross-examination of a character witness about an earlier arrest of the defendant. And the statement by Mr. Justice Jackson (at p. 477) relied on by the government does no more than to exclude proof of specific "good" acts (cf. Mr. Justice Rutledge at p. 491).

It may also be true as was said in the Michelson case, that a defendant takes a calculated risk when he introduces character evidence. The risk is that the prosecution may have evidence damaging to the alleged reputation for good character. But in the absence of such evidence, does he take the risk that the trial judge may attack his reputation by subtle suggestion that the accused has over the years deceived the good friends he has brought before the jury. The influence of the trial judge in a lengthy trial is not to be gainsaid. Here the charge completely nullified the testimony of the witnesses. It was tantamount to denying it any weight. It was prejudicial error.

The charge here used by the Trial Court appears, according to the government's brief below, to have become standard in the Southern District of New York. It appears to be inconsistent with the views expressed by this Court in Edgerton v. United States, 164 U. S. 361, 366. It is important, therefore, that its propriety should be passed on by this Court.

VI

The Court below reversed the conviction of the three broker defendants, and dismissed the indictment as to them. On application for rehearing the Court's attention was directed to the prejudice which resulted because evidence was received which would have been inadmissible had these three persons not been defendants. The Court below ignored the matter in its denial of the petition.

Since none of this prejudicial testimony would have been admissible at a trial at which the broker defendants were not included as conspirators, it would be a miscarriage of justice to permit the conviction of the other defendants to stand. No one can say to what extent the jury may have been influenced by that testimony. And a conviction so based should be set aside: Kotteakos v. United States, 328 U. S. 750.

We submit the situation is similar to that in which a jury has been permitted to find a verdict on a theory of the case which should not have been submitted to it. In such situation reversal necessarily follows: Stromberg v. California, 283 U. S. 359, 367-368; William v. North Carolina, 317 U. S. 287, 291 292; Cramer v. United States, 325 U. S. 136, n. 45; Yates v. United States, 354 U. S. 298, 312.

So in Anderson v. United States, 318 U. S. 350, the conviction of all defendants was reversed because confessions by some of them had been improperly received. And in McDonald v. United States, 335 U. S. 451, the same result was reached where evidence had been illegally seized from one of the defendants. (Cf. Darby v. United States, 293 F. 2d 33, 9th Cir.) As was said by Judge (now Chief Judge) Lumbard in United States v. Tomaiolo, 249 F. 2d 683 (2d Cir.), at p. 696:

> "Where errors as to one defendant are so substantial and; of such nature as to affect a co-defendant with whom he is tried jointly, appellate courts have reversed the convictions of both defendants on trial where it seemed that they could not have been fairly tried. United States v. Thomson, 7 Cir., 1940, 113 F. 2d 643, 129 A. L. R 1291; Feder v. United States, 2 Cir., 1919, 257 F. 694, 5 A. L. R. 370; Smith v. United States, 5 Cir., 1956, 230 F. 2d 935; Nelson v. United States, 1953, 93 U. S. App. D. C. 14, 208 F. 2d 505; Duncan v. United States, 7 Cir., 1928, 23 F. 2d 3."

The recent case of Schaffer v. United States appears to point the clear way to the answer to this unusual question. (United States v. Schaffer, 266 F. 2d 435; Schaffer v. United States, 362 U. S. 511). In that case three separate groups of defendants were charged in three separate counts with "knowingly transporting stolen merchandise". The fourth count charged a conspiracy to transport stolen merchandise in interstate commerce. Defendants did not take the stand, and at the conclusion of the case, defendants moved for the dismissal of the conspiracy count which was granted.

The Court of Appeals agreed that absent the conspiracy count, it would have been error to try the appellants together. But the Court of Appeals held that no prejudice had resulted as contended by appellants.

The Court of Appeals said (266 F. 2d at 441):

> "* * * We have no problem of evidence admitted against one appellant which incidentally implicates another. There was only one witness common to all defendants, Tony Stracuzza, and he gave his testimony in orderly fashion describing his business and then his relationship and his transactions with each defendant in turn. Each defendant lived in a different part of the East, except the two Schaffers who operated their store together; and there is nothing in the record to indicate that any one of them knew of Stracuzza's dealings with the others.
>
> "At best appellants' claims of prejudice come down to a complaint about the guilty 'atmosphere' built up by associating each with others so obviously guilty, and the fact that a 'tainted' witness was buttressed by the independent proof relating to all defendants, instead of that relating to one alone."

This Court granted certiorari, and then affirmed by a vote of five to four.

Judge Douglas in a separate dissenting opinion said:

> "The Court of Appeals, while conceding that it would have been clearly erroneous to try petitioners together were it not for the conspiracy count, concluded that no showing of prejudice had been established and that the District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying separate trials.

* * * * *

I take a different view. I believe that once the conspiracy count was dismissed, the court had before it the same problem as would be presented if the prosecution had sought to try before a single jury separate indictments against defendants who had been charged with like crimes but which were wholly unrelated to each other."

* * * * *

The principals enunciated in the Schaffer cases both in the Court of Apeals, and in the majority and dissenting opinions in this Court dictate the necessity of a reversal in this case.

In the Schaffer case the Trial Court dismissed the conspiracy count with the consequence that the jury was properly advised as to the situation resulting from the dismissal. In the instant case the dismissal as to the broker defendants came in the Court of Appeals, long after the jury's verdict. Who can tell what the effect would have been upon the jury had the Trial Judge dismissed Count 50 as to the broker defendants, and had ordered stricken from the record all the prejudicial testimony adverted to above?

In the Schaffer case the damaging testimony came from a single witness whose testimony was directed to all of the defendants. In the instant case the evidence came from many witnesses and sources who and which had no relation whatever to petitioner.

In the Schaffer case the central issue was simple. In the instant case the Court below conceded that the case was complex.

In the Schaffer case the trial lasted two weeks. In the instant case it lasted several months.

We submit that the reversal of the verdict against the broker defendants for lack of proof requires a new trial for petitioner because much of the proof which related solely to them could not have come in but for their improper inclusion as defendants in the case.

VII

We realize that in this ground we are asking the Court to depart from its general and well justified reluctance to review a conviction after it has been passed on by two courts. But we do so because we feel strongly that a miscarriage of justice has resulted, one which, if not corrected, will destroy the career of a lawyer who has had an unblemished reputation.

We believe that the combination of circumstances already outlined resulted in a trial that was so unfair to this petitioner that this Court should review it. We shall briefly recapitulate these circumstances:

(a) The $19,000

The prosecutor in his opening charged petitioner with having failed to return $19,000 of Homestead funds (J. 143a-145a) and permitted a witness, Holland, to testify on the subject (see J. 347a), although the facts were otherwise (see J. 568a, 569a, 1753a-1757a, 1759a). The Court below recognized that this "was quite prejudicial and might have been excluded" but it justified its receipt as being relevant to other aspects of the case (in what particular was not indicated). This started the case against petitioner in a most prejudicial light.

(b) The Trial Court's Attitude

We have summarized numerous instances throughout the trial of harassment of petitioner's counsel which necessarily affected his conduct of the trial and must have produced a very unfavorable impression on the jury.

(c) The Carroll Testimony

As already pointed out the prosecutor let a witness (Carroll) testify to statements made by petitioner indicating his connection with Texas-Adams in July 1955 (J. 518a, 521a, 522a-524a), although the prosecutor knew, from other wholly credible witnesses (see J. 336a, 337a, 348a, 1337a, 1352a) that this could not have been so. And, in the Court below, the prosecutor conceded that Carroll's testimony was "unquestionably wrong." Yet he did not disavow it before the jury. That was another nail in the coffin which the jury was thus permitted to use.

(d) The Government's Cross-Examination of Its Own Witness

When the witness Greenberg was on the stand the Court, over objection by defense counsel (J. 785a, 789a), permitted the government to cross-examine him on the theory that the government was surprised (J. 785a, 789a) and that the witness had proved hostile (J. 803a). The question arose because the witness had testified that he had received certain Texas-Adams stock registered in the name of Jannis from one Dawson and didn't know its source (J. 793a), while the government had expected him to testify that it had come from one of the broker defendants, Gordon. The basis for the government's expectation was a post office inspector's interview with the witness (J. 784a). It appeared later that the witness had twice conferred with government counsel and told them that he repudiated what the notes of the interview disclosed (J. 796a-799a). Defense counsel then moved to strike his testimony and for the withdrawal of a juror because of the prejudicial character of the testimony (J. 800a-804a).

The Court below did not discuss this episode, probably because it reversed the convictions of the broker defendants. But it surely must have a profound prejudicial effect on the jury.

(e) Receipt of Evidence

We have already noted that the way in which the indictment was worded permitted the introduction against this petitioner of the evidence with regard to the misuse of the funds of Texas-Adams for the purpose of obtaining control of it, although petitioner was not connected with that transaction in any way.

(f) In addition, the prosecution was allowed to bring in a whole series of transactions which bore so remotely on the basic charges of the indictment that the purpose of doing so was primarily to depict all the defendants as bad men and so prejudice the jury.

Of this character were the following:

1. The Worth Investment Deal: The transaction was entirely outside the scope of the alleged conspiracy, and by its very nature precluded participation or adoption by the other alleged conspirators (J. 1102a; 1107a; 1108a; 1111a; 1114a).

The over-all effect was to show that certain of the defendants looted the corporate till for personal gain. The over-all conspiracy-charge made it possible to designate loosely "all" the defendants as associates in the alleged crime even though it bore no relation to the conspiracy charged in the indictment.

The Trial Court charged (G. 220a, 221a) that the jury could infer from the evidence that one or more of the defendants had "violated his trust and committed fraud."

2. The Lazy Jay Deal: In this transaction McCarthy sold to a co-conspirator, Larry Rosen, a parcel of property owned by Texas-Adams, known as "Lazy Jay". Rosen bought the property by secret arrangement with McCarthy pursuant to a pre-arranged sale in Canada for a substantially higher price. He divided the swag with McCarthy (J. 1350a et seq.). Here, again, is a transaction having no relevancy to the alleged conspiracy. It was a strictly private, secret off-the-record deal in which none of the other alleged co-conspirators was involved, and was clearly not in furtherance of the alleged conspiracy (J. 1348a et seq.).

3. The Crosby-Jannis Deals: These deals were spelled out in a written communication between Crosby and Jannis in which they admitted between themselves that Jannis was acting as agent for McCarthy, Pettit and Meredith in connection with the sale of Texas-Adams stock, allegedly obtained by fraudulent means from Texas-Adams. The proceeds of the sales were allegedly divided among them (R. 2398, 2421, 2440, 2488, 2490 and Ex. 60A). Petitioner was not one of the participants although the Court below incorrectly included him in its opinion which it subsequently corrected after the application for rehearing.

The prejudice to petitioner was grave because, though the letter did not suggest that he was a member of this inner group, and had shared in the spoils, the judge in his charge to the jury obfuscated the contents of this baneful letter. He referred to the letter as one involving Crosby, McCarthy, "and others" (G. 211a).

This was at the end of a long trial. The letter was short. The judge could have read the letter or specified the names mentioned. He said instead "McCarthy and others". It is not difficult to assume that the jury could have included petitioner as one of the recipients of the Crosby largesse by reason of the fact that it was his opinion letters which released the stock which was issued to Jannis and sold by Crosby.

(4) The record is replete with private sales by McCarthy and Crosby of Texas-Adams stock for personal profit. These derelictions weighed heavily on the other defendants who were completely unconnected with them. Taken "subject to connection" which was never established, the other defendants had to bear the burden of transference of guilt by alleged conspiratorial association.

Kotteakos is authority for the proposition that an alleged single overall conspiracy encumbered by extraneous prejudicial issues, and numerous defendants with complicated issues at law, may become too difficult for consideration by a jury.

Kotteakos is a striking case historically. But it is merely a special instance of a well grounded rule that prejudicial collateral matter may not be introduced into a case, though possibly relevant, if the overall result is to prejudice a defendant's rights. Because of the extreme latitude improperly and unfairly extended to the government, petitioner's rights were prejudiced!

The trial judge seems to have taken it for granted that anything done by a conspirator regardless of its relation to the conspiracy was chargeable against the alleged co-conspirators. This is, of course, not the law.

It was Judge Hand who said in United States v. Peoni, 100 F. 2d 401, 403 (C. C. A. 2d, 1938):

> "At times it seems to be supposed that, once some kind of criminal concert is established, all parties are liable for everything anyone of the original participants does, and even for what those do who join later. Nothing could be more untrue. Nobody is liable in conspiracy except for the fair import of the concerted purpose or agreement as he understands it; if later-comers change that, he is not liable for the change; his liability is limited to the common purposes while he remains in it. The confusion is perhaps due to the fact that everything done by the conspirators—including the declarations of later entrants—is competent evidence against all, so far as it may fairly be thought to be in execution of the concert to which the accused is privy, though that doctrine too is often abused.'

(g) The Post Verdict Motion

This motion was based on the jurors having learned of McCarthy's plea of guilty in disregard of the Court's instructions not to read about the case or to listen to radio comments (J. 1876a-1897a).

It should be noted again that petitioner's counsel had pointed out the likelihood that, without intention, the jury might learn of the McCarthy plea and asked the Court to inquire the next day whether they had learned of it (J. 227a, 228a) Because other counsel objected the Court refused to do this (J. 228a, 229a).

The Court below upheld the denial of that motion primarily on the ground that the plea could have been taken in the jury's presence (infra, 2719). In support of that view the Court below cited Wood v. United States, 279 F.

2d 359 (9th Cir.); Richards v. United States, 193 F. 2d 554 (10th Cir.), and Schiefer v. United States, 288 Fed. 368 (3d Cir.). And it ruled that the effect on the jury could not be inquired into, citing McDonald v. Pless, 238 U. S. 264, and Rotundo v. Isthmian S.S. Co., 243 F. 2d 581 (2d Cir.) and 8 Wigmore on Evidence (2349. The Pless case, however, carefully pointed out that no inflexible rule should be laid down.

The cases that support taking a plea of guilty in the presence of the jury do so on the theory that explicit instructions remove any possible prejudice. Normally these take the form of a statement that the plea should in no way be considered as bearing on the guilt of any other defendant, or even as to the commission of the offense charged. In the case at bar no such instruction could be given since the jury was not supposed to know about the plea. Of course the jury knew that something had happened since McCarthy disappeared from the scene. So the trial Court told the jury only the following: "The defendant McCarthy is no longer on trial, and you, therefore, have no verdict to render with respect to him" (G. 161a). And, toward the end of the charge, he told the jurors to disregard anything they had read or heard about the case outside the evidence and that the guilt of each defendant must be considered separately (G. 330a).

Can these generalities be equated with the specific caution given in the cases cited by the Court below? We believe not. At least the issue is an important one meriting consideration by this Court.

Taken together, we submit, these matters prevented petitioner from having had a fair trial.

CONCLUSION

It is respectfully submitted that this Court should issue the writ prayed for.

Respectfully submitted,

Osmond K. Fraenkel,
Counsel for Petitioner.

APPENDIX

Opinion of United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit

See Opposite

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS

FOR THE SECOND CIRCUIT

No. 302—October Term, 1960.

(Argued May 9, 1961 —Decided August 22, 1961.)

Docket No. 26398

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

Appellee,

—v.—

FRANCIS PETER CROSBY, J. LEONARD GOLDBERG, PHILIP GORDON, EUGENE MEREDITH, LEO B. MITTELMAN, WORTH PETTIT, JR., PAUL REICHER and PHILIP GORDON & COMPANY, INC., Defendants-Appellants.

Before:

FRIENDLY and SMITH, Circuit Judges, and WATKINS, *District Judge

Appeals by seven individual defendants and one corporate defendant from judgments of conviction entered on various counts of a fifty count indictment after a trial in the District Court for the Southern District of New York before Hon. Lloyd F. MacMahon, J. and a jury. 15 U. S. C. §77e(a)(1) and (2), 18 U. S. C. §§371, 1341, 1343. Affirmed as to four individual defendants on all counts; reversed and remanded with instructions to dismiss the indictment as to three individuals and the corporate appellant.

* U. S. District Judge for the Northern and Southern Districts of West Virginia, sitting by designation.

ARNOLD N. ENKER and GEORGE I. GORDON, Asst. U. S. Attorneys, S. D. N. Y., New York City (Robert M. Morgenthau, U. S. Attorney and Peter H. Morrison, Asst. U. S. Attorney, S. D. N. Y., New York City, on the brief), for appellee.

RICHARD OWEN, New York City, for appellant Francis Peter Crosby.

MENAHEM STIM, New York City (Allen S. Stim, John F. Kelly, M. Walter Hulkower, New York City, on the brief), for appellant J. Leonard Goldberg.

MAURICE NESSEN, New York City (Rubino, Franken, Kramer, Bam & Nessen, New York City, on the brief), for appellant Philip Gordon.

CHARLES GREENBAUM, New York City, for appellant Eugene Meredith.

EDWARD M. GARLOCK, New York City, for appellant Leo B. Mittelman.

EDWARD E. RIGNEY, New York City (Alexander & Green, New York City, on the brief), for appellant Worth Pettit, Jr.

MOSES L. KOVE, New York City (Menahem Stim, New York City, on the brief), for appellant Paul Reicher.

SMITH, Circuit Judge:

These are appeals pressed by a stock brokerage firm and seven individual defendants found guilty on various fraud and conspiracy charges of a fifty count indictment after a protracted jury trial of some fifteen weeks. Some appellants urge insufficiency of the evidence as grounds for reversal while others claim the case against them was rather weak and inconclusive—thereby magnifying the prejudicial effect of claimed misconduct and excessive zeal on the part of the prosecution and of alleged errors on the part of the Court. There is little choice, therefore, but to delineate in some detail the scheme or schemes charged to the appellants as developed in a trial transcript of approximately 9000 pages.

The only convicted defendant not appealing, Texas-Adams Oil Co., Inc. (Texas-Adams), was the central "glue" in the fraudulent schemes charged by the government. Count 1 was a so-called "wire fraud" count, 18 U. S. C. §1343; in it defendants Crosby, McCarthy[1] and Pettit were accused of using interstate telephone wires in furtherance of a plan which resulted in the defendants "purchasing" control of Texas-Adams using that company's own funds as consideration, thereby defrauding the other stockholders. Counts 2-32 charged Crosby,[2] Meredith, Mittelman, Pettit and Texas-Adams with violations of 18 U. S. C. §1341, the Federal "mail fraud" section. While each count was based on a separate alleged mailing, the "scheme or artifice" charged was the same in all cases. The government generally sought to prove that the defendants had made or knowingly sanctioned fraudulent misrepresentations to the investing public and to brokers and businessmen dealing with Texas-Adams; that defendants had engineered various corporate mergers and purchases, with little or no business substance, whose sole or principal purpose was the flooding of the market with worthless or overpriced Texas-Adams share certificates; and that defendants had fraudulently authorized the issuance of corporate stock without consideration in return for "kickbacks" from the proceeds of the sales of those shares. Further, the Count One "scheme" was incorporated by reference into these mail fraud counts.

---

1 William J. McCarthy, president of Texas-Adams during most of the period pertinent to the indictment, changed his plea to guilty during the first week of the trial. Appellants moved for mistrial on the basis of that change of plea and assign the Court's denial as error; this contention will be discussed infra.

2 Crosby was named, in this group, only in Counts 2-7, 12 and 14.

The next seventeen counts charge all the aforementioned defendants, save Crosby, plus Goldberg, Gordon, Reicher and Philip Gordon & Co., Inc. with wilfully and knowingly using the mails to sell common stock of Texas-Adams—which stock was not covered by a registration certificate filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission, 15 U. S. C. §§77e(a)(1) and (2), 77x. Many of the mailings concerned a multi-colored brochure, allegedly containing many fraudulent misrepresentations, entitled "Texas-Adams—an industrial empire is under way."[3] The final count was the ever present conspiracy indictment. In it were accused McCarthy and all the appellants in addition to Joseph Castagna and Guy Gully, acquitted by the jury. Numerous co-conspirators, not defendants, were also named —many of whom testified at the trial. The thrust of the alleged conspiracy was the use of the mails to foster the sale of unregistered securities; all of the appellants were convicted on this count.[4]

---

3 In Counts 39-49 the mailings involved were of share certificates of Texas-Adams. Philip Gordon & Co., Inc., and the three individual broker defendants, Gordon, Goldberg and Reicher were not charged in Counts 39 and 40.

I. The Texas-Adams Story

A. Pre-Natal Activity

Relevant proof adduced by the government at trial actually went back in time several months before the principal "management" defendants obtained control of Texas-Adams. During the summer of 1955 McCarthy and Mittelman were engaged in negotiations with one Claget Sanders to purchase from the Ajax Oil Company concededly valuable oil producing properties in what were known as the Bonanza and Poplar fields in Montana and Wyoming. The price agreed upon was $1,250,000.

It was at about this time, in June, 1955, that the American Montana Oil & Gas Corporation, later used as a dummy buyer in the fraudulent takeover of Texas-Adams, was organized by Mittelman, a New York attorney; however, no organizational meeting was held until October, at which time Crosby, Pettit and McCarthy were elected its officers.

An early linking of appellant Crosby to McCarthy and Mittelman was shown by Basil Zavoico. He was a petroleum

---

4 The trial court dismissed thirteen of the counts before the case was given to the jury, four of the mail fraud counts (3, 8, 28 and 29) and nine of the counts dealing with the use of the mails to sell unregistered securities (33, 35-7, 41, 42, 44, 45, 49). Crosby was found guilty on Counts 1-7 and 50, but acquitted on 12 and 14; Meredith was convicted on all counts submitted to the jury except Count 1 (he was not named); the jury convicted Pettit on the surviving counts between 1 and 22, 39, 40, 43 and 50—and acquitted him on 23-32, 34, 38, 46-8; Mittelman was found guilty only on the first mail fraud count and on the conspiracy. The brokers were convicted on all counts on which their names were submitted to the jury, 34, 38, 46-8 and 50. The government, on appeal, has confessed error on Counts 34 and 38; the proof there showed that the brochures allegedly mailed to facilitate sales of unregistered securities were not mailed until after the sales proved in those counts.

consultant approached by Crosby in May of 1955 to obtain engineering reports on the Bonanza and Poplar properties. A month later Crosby again retained him to prepare a statement reflecting the financial structure of a Dumont Airplane & Marine Instrument Co. after an anticipated purchase by that corporation of the Ajax properties. (Zavoico was told that American Montana held an option to purchase from Ajax—and would in turn sell to Dumont.) The terms of the projected Dumont-American Montana "sale" would have netted a $2 million profit for the latter company.[5]

Apparently lacking funds to swing the Ajax purchase, McCarthy and Mittelman then concluded an agreement, in Denver, with Homestead Oil & Uranium Co. of Colorado. They told Holland, president of Homestead, that they already had control of Dumont—and agreed, in return for a loan of $50,000 to be used as partial payment for the Ajax properties, to merge Homestead into Dumont.[6] The 5 Later, after the takeover of Texas-Adams, Crosby again contacted Zavoico and had him prepare a report on the projected sale of the Ajax properties—this time to Texas-Adams. The Sundown Oil Company was to pass on the Ajax fields (price to Sundown one and a quarter million) to Texas-Adams for $1 million in cash, $1 million in ten year notes, and 1,250,000 shares of Texas-Adams stock valued at that time at one dollar a share.

6 Homestead was apparently in trouble of its own. A public issue of $300,000 of its capital stock had been authorized without S.E.C. registration pursuant to a Regulation "A" exemption. The underwriters, however, had failed to obtain subscriptions for the entire issue; the promoters were faced with the possible necessity of undergoing the process of registration with its attendant public disclosures. Such a course may well have been a particularly uncomfortable one as Homestead had purchased certain "uranium properties" from one Paul R. Jones, a co-conspirator who appears to have specialized in acquiring worthless mining claims and reselling them to captive or cooperative corporations at a lucrative profit.

Probably to ease the difficult situation Homestead's promoters found themselves in, Mittelman and McCarthy undertook to complete sale of the subscription issue. 1,800,000 of the original public issue of instrumentality set up for this merger was still another penniless, dummy corporation, Sundown Oil Co. of Colorado, which had as officers and directors McCarthy, Mittelman and Paul R. Jones, a co conspirator.

Although the record is silent on this point, plans for the acquisition of Dumont must have collapsed sometime that summer. Rather, an agreement was made between one Satiris Fassoulis and McCarthy whereby "groups" headed by those two men were to obtain control of Continental Car-na-var Corp.- at which time Continental would purchase all the stock of Sundown (which was to have acquired the Ajax properties). Holland and Homestead were in turn reassured by an agreement wherein Continental agreed to replace Dumont and merge with the uranium company.

The financial problems of McCarthy and Mittelman during this period are painfully obvious. The Ajax commitment called for 1¼ million dollars - the sole amount visibly raised was the $50,000 from Homestead in return for the promise of merger. The "McCarthy group" was to have produced $277,000 to purchase control of Continental in conjunction with Fassoulis; in order partially to meet their commitments in this direction, Mittelman was forced to go to Denver to obtain from Holland release of the same $50,000 which had been banked in Billings, Montana pend

---

5,000,000 shares at $.05 remained unsold. Mittelman thereafter [illegible] shares with $90,000 borrowed from Howard P. Carroll, underwriting broker for Homestead, and an associate. He then borrowed the $90,000 back from Homestead, immediately repaid the personal loans, and headed back east with the stock, which he was to attempt to sell. Apparently, a half million shares were left with Jones in Birmingham, Alabama and Mittelman turned over the remaining certificates to Satiris G. Fassoulis in New York. Fassoulis had agreed to help dispose of the Homestead stock in order to help the McCarthy group straighten its financial skirts in connection with other proposed mergers and purchases being negotiated in New York, see infra. Homestead was finally merged into Texa-Adams after the "management" defendants gained control of that corporation.

ing closing of the Ajax deal. This money was then forwarded to the New York attorneys of the Limestreet Corporation, from whom McCarthy and Fassoulis were purchasing control of Continental. In the end, both the Ajax and Continental deals fell through for lack of funds—but both of these episodes shed light on the eventual Texas-Adams machinations.

B. An "Industrial Empire" Is Begun

While Crosby's connections with the foregoing transactions can only tangentially be inferred, he here enters the scene, center stage. In August of 1955 he, with co-conspirator Lawrence Rosen, placed an ad in the Wall Street Journal seeking the controlling interest in a publicly held corporation. Among those responding to the ad were the controlling shareholders of Texas-Adams Oil Co., Inc., defendants Gordon, Goldberg and Reicher. They had incorporated Texas-Adams two years before and had financed it with a public issue exempt from registration under Regulation "A." The company's headquarters were in the offices of the brokerage firm, Philip Gordon & Co., Inc. Texas-Adams had been relatively dormant during its short history—only in March of 1955 did it acquire an interest in some Texas oil producing properties which earned about $10,000 in gross income by the time of the sale of control to McCarthy and his associates in late September of that year.

Preliminary negotiations were held among Crosby, McCarthy and Goldberg and agreement was reached on the sale of 283,000 shares of Texas-Adams for $105,000—$45,000 at closing, $20,000 in sixty days and $40,000 in ninety days; the lion's share of the stock certificates was to be escrowed pending payment on the time notes.

Closing of the transaction was twice postponed because of the buyers' financing difficulties, the second postponement being accompanied by a $1,000 check, on September 25, 1955, to evidence the continuing good faith of the McCarthy group. Defendant Pettit had by that time joined the purchasing group as that check was traced from his account in a Salt Lake City bank.

The closing was finally consummated on September 27, 1955. The buyers' arrangements for "financing" were most interesting. Crosby and McCarthy approached Joseph Spiotta, a New Jersey money lender, seeking $40,300 to meet the closing installment of $45,000. He agreed to furnish that sum on the strength of a representation that Texas-Adams would use the City National Bank & Trust Co. of Hackensack, New Jersey (where Spiotta was a director) as a repository for funds, and on the strength of a guarantee that Spiotta's account in that bank would be credited with $42,000 before he ever parted with his money.

The Texas-Adams bank account, some $60,000, had been kept with the Underwriters Trust Company in New York. When the buyers represented that they were going to move that account to the New Jersey bank, the sellers agreed to switch the funds, prior to closing, to the Chemical Corn Exchange Bank, scene of the closing and one of two New York banks serving as correspondent to the City National in Hackensack.

On September 26th, the buyers opened three new accounts in Hackensack in the names of Sundown, American Montana and Texas-Adams; a token deposit of $100 was placed in each account. Proper corporate resolutions and signature cards for all the companies were filed with the bank and the corporate seal of Texas-Adams was exhibited and used for that purpose. At the same time a set of checks and deposit slips was prepared reflecting a series of transfers to take place the next day. $51,700 was to be transferred from the Texas-Adams account at Chemical Corn to its City National account. Two Texas-Adams checks totaling $51,250 would then transfer funds to Sundown and American Montana; almost all of the amount deposited in Sundown's favor would be immediately credited to American Montana, the putative purchaser of Texas-Adams. Finally, an American Montana check for $42,000 was made out to Spiotta's account to "reimburse" that gentleman.

Next morning, the day of the closing (but before Texas Adams changed hands), Crosby attempted to make a wire transfer to New Jersey. A Chemical Corn official refused to make that transfer because the resolutions and signature cards gave authority only to the "old" management. Crosby quickly cured that defect by executing new resolutions and signature cards—once again using the Texas-Adams seal. The money was wired to the City National and Spiotta, after personally checking by telephone to make sure his account was $42,000 richer, "loaned" American Montana the funds necessary for the purchase.

Only $42,000 of Texas-Adams funds was actually used in the purchase of control of the corporation; $9,250 remained in the American Montana account in Hackensack. This money too was quickly siphoned off, however. Pettit, whose $4,700 with Spiotta's $40,300 had made up the purchase price, was handsomely rewarded in the form of two American Montana checks, a total of $6,700, drawn by Crosby and credited to Pettit's Salt Lake City account. The remaining $2,550 Crosby paid to himself through a dummy and co-conspirator, George Jannis, about whom we shall hear more later. Thus the "buyers" successfully contrived not only to purchase Texas-Adams with its own money, but also enriched themselves, from the till, for their labors.

C. Dynastic Operations

It is indeed difficult to telescope the fantastic activity of Texas-Adams and its controlling proprietors during the ten months or so after acquisition by McCarthy, Crosby and company in September of 1955. Texas-Adams' outstanding stock ballooned, during that period, from 750,000 to almost ten million shares; not one share, however, was at any time the subject of a registration statement filed with the S.E.C.

Many of the deals sought by Texas-Adams never reached fruition, usually for lack of necessary funds. Two of these were the so-called "Longview, Texas" acquisition and the Taylorcraft merger. An option to purchase the Longview properties (oil) for $275,000 was entered into in the name of one of the ever available corporate dummies, Sundown Oil Company of California. The search for this sum of money led McCarthy and Pettit to Alabama in November, 1955. There Paul Jones and Sterling Graham, a Pittsburgh broker and also a co-conspirator, were engaged in underwriting public issues of stock on two "intrastate" corporations, Warrior Products Company and Gypsy Mining Company, under the watchful eye of the Alabama Securities Commission. These corporations apparently were organized to buy some of Jones' seemingly boundless supply of "mining properties." Graham told McCarthy that the Alabama commission would not allow a Texas-Adams merger with either of the local corporations and suggested a merger between Texas-Adams and Taylorcraft, a Pennsylvania manufacturer of light aircraft into which Warrior was to have been merged.

Taylorcraft, which was experiencing ready cash difficulties of its own, was not the answer to Texas-Adams' need for cash to close the Longview oil deal.[7] At this point, Jones came up with another, more suitable deal. He suggested that Texas-Adams buy from the Osage Mining Co. (another corporate repository for some of the Jones "properties") a lease on a feldspar mine in Spruce Pine, North Carolina for 375,000 freely transferable Texas-Adams shares. Jones would "accept" only the proceeds from the sale of 75,000 of those shares while Texas-Adams would receive, for its use in Texas, the proceeds from public subscription of the remaining block.

McCarthy not only accepted this offer, but, in implementing it, went a long step farther. The actual purchase of the mining lease was made in the name of American Montana—which company agreed to resell the feldspar mine to Texas-Adams for 650,000 shares plus a cash payment of $75,000. Much of the rest of the Osage story is too obscure and complicated to be drawn out in detail here. It is enough to say, however, that the sale, kickback and resale procedure was used as a vehicle to sell to the public hundreds of thousands of unregistered Texas-Adams shares; the same certificate for 375,000 shares was caused to be broken down and issued by two different stock transfer companies; the feldspar mine in question was inactive, flooded with water, and worthless; and, finally, Texas-Adams never bothered even to take title on the lease.

While the Osage transaction is perhaps the most artful example of the McCarthy stewardship of Texas-Adams, passing mention may be made of other corporate depredations. More than 70,000 shares of stock were issued, without consideration, to George Jannis, a chauffeur, valet and handyman of Crosby's, for imaginary loans and services rendered. These shares were cleared for trading by defendant Mittelman's opinion letters and the proceeds, after token payments to Jannis, went to enrich appellant Crosby at least.

---

7 This, however, did not stop Texas-Adams from going ahead with negotiations for a Taylorcraft merger—perhaps in the hope of eventually grasping the Warrior funds which the aircraft company was to obtain. A Texas-Adams Taylorcraft merger was approved by the respective Boards of Directors and McCarthy and Crosby were elected to the five man Taylorcraft Board. The plan was never submitted to the stockholders of Taylorcraft for necessary ratification, however, and the final merger was never consummated. This fact, likewise, did not deter Texas-Adams from making untrue representations concerning the value of Taylorcraft in its market literature.

Mergers were accomplished with the Empire Drilling Company and the United States Sulphur Company. In the former transaction a purchase of Empire stock was misrepresented as a purchase of all the assets of that company.[8] Further, machinery was set up whereby creditors and "interest holders" in wells being developed by Empire could trade their interests in Empire for Texas-Adams stock. All told, 3,100,000 shares of Texas-Adams were issued for these purposes. Aside from the fact that the U. S. Sulphur properties appear to have been worthless, the government proved no real infirmity in that transaction. On top of the quarter of a million shares actually used to buy out the United States Sulphur Company, however, an additional 150,000 shares were issued under fraudulent circumstances, purportedly in connection with the Sulphur Company deal, to L. W. Ltd., a Canadian dummy corporation which Mittelman "served" as vice-president.

The final notable transaction was the so-called Comigu deal, in which Texas-Adams bought, for two million shares, twenty prospecting permits on supposed tantalum mining properties on the bank of the Sinn Marie River in French Guiana. The seller was acquitted defendant Guy Gully and, like Osage, the transaction apparently involved a substantial kickback of shares which were then sold to the public through Castagna, McCarthy's young brother-in-law.[9] Once again, as in the case of Osage, Texas-Adams never bothered to take title to the permits.

---

8 The significance of this misrepresentation is discussed below.

Although the aforementioned dealings were highly effective in keeping a steady flow of Texas-Adams shares entering the market, it was a key to the success of these schemes to maintain the price of those shares at a fairly high level. This was accomplished by a high pressure public relations campaign coupled with the use of patently fraudulent misrepresentations in the company's public reports. Within a week of the September 27, 1955 takeover of Texas-Adams, Crosby and McCarthy contacted co-conspirators W. Ware Lynch and Russell Birdwell Associates, Inc. to start rolling a publicity campaign.

Lynch obtained newspaper coverage on the change in Texas-Adams control and management; the McCarthy name was fully exploited.[10] Later, there was extensive reporting of the Empire merger which stressed tremendous growth in the assets of Texas-Adams to a false figure of more than nine million dollars. In November of 1955, a "Report to the Stockholders" was sent to brokers dealing in Texas-Adams. Among major misrepresentations there made were statements that prior to the new management Texas-Adams had a yearly income of $35,000; that acquisition of the "Bonanza Field in Montana" had been accomplished, with resultant additions to income of $33,000-$34,000 per month; that the new management had acquired,

---

9 As noted before, both Castagna and Gully were acquitted by the jury. Gully's defense, apparently accepted by the jury, was that his endorsement had been forged on the allegedly kicked back certificates. Whether the shares were kicked back by agreement or stolen and forged, the role played on the Texas-Adams side of the transaction was patently illegal.

10 McCarthy is the brother of Glenn McCarthy—of Texas oil and Shamrock Hotel fame.

for $300,000 and 850,000 shares of stock, some east Texas oil acreage with $24,000 net monthly income and $4 million proven reserves in each of five well locations; that negotiations had been completed to take over Osage, replete with "300,000 in cash and a producing feldspar mine • • • [and] valuable samples of uranium and mica"; and that Homestead, when merged, possessed cash totaling $140,000

Many of the foregoing—and other—misstatements of fact were made more specifically in a series of Texas-Adams pro forma balance sheets issued with the aid of Herman Lubin, an accountant and co-conspirator, in February and March of 1956. What the original report to the stockholders lacked from a purely artistic standpoint was amply supplied by the production and dissemination of an attractive, pictorialized brochure which substantially mimed the bald misstatements of fact and gross overstatements of assets contained in the earlier literature.

Such methods were generally successful, in conjunction with active promotion by various brokers in New York, Pittsburgh and Denver, in keeping Texas-Adams common priced at an artificially high level. The government adduced proof, however, that in at least one instance more direct market manipulation was necessary. Mass unloading of stock by the former creditors and interest holders of Empire was threatening, in February of 1956, to deflate seriously the market in Texas-Adams. In response to this danger, those shareholders were urged to sell back to the corporation at a guaranteed rate of one dollar per share. To support this corporate extravagance, brokers in turn were induced to buy the shares from Texas-Adams and pass them on to the public at that price. The brokers were encouraged to enter into these dealings by an offer of two bonus shares of Texas-Adams for every share bought at an artificial level; 200,000 shares emanating from the Comigu-produced "gravy" were placed in escrow to provide this bonus stock.

II. Sufficiency of the Evidence

A. The "Management" Defendants

While Crosby, Pettit, Meredith and Mittelman do not dispute the fact that the evidence against them properly warranted submission of the case to the jury, they all argue that the record is equivocal as to their guilt--and that the factual issues involved are such close ones that even minor errors at trial would be deserving of a reversal by this court and a remand for a new trial. We disagree.

The proof against Crosby on the Count One scheme is overwhelming. His counsel would have us believe there was a genuine jury issue as to whether Crosby was in "good faith" in this transaction—i.e., whether the defendant considered the raiding of the Texas-Adams treasury a "loan" to American Montana. Ignoring the evidence that Crosby immediately caused to be drained the $9,000 not used in the purchase of control, and even if the record failed to indicate that American Montana not only was penniless but also had "no visible means of support," only an incredibly naive jury could be expected to credit such a story. His culpability on the mail fraud and conspiracy counts is similarly evident. The feeble contention that the Jannis assaults on the investing public were in legitimate pursuit of a deserved "finder's fee" is hardly worth mentioning.

Pettit and Meredith both challenge the degree of actual knowing and fraudulent participation proved by the government. Meredith, the only defendant who took the stand in his own behalf, attempted to define his role in the scheme as that of a mere errand boy. Both were experienced businessmen before they came east for their alliance with Mc-Carthy; yet both would have us believe—and claim the jury might easily have found—they were credulous schoolboys completely taken in by the impressive, free-wheeling Texas oil "operator," McCarthy. Apart from the substantial incredibility inherent in these claims, there was more than ample independent evidence supporting scienter on the part of both defendants.

Pettit received back more than his original investment, from the Texas-Adams treasury, within two days of the takeover of control; a later payment, from proceeds of sale of Osage stock, was made to a Kathrine McDavitt, a lady friend of Pettit. A number of witnesses testified either that Pettit misrepresented facts[11] or was present and participating at conferences where McCarthy did the same. Meredith's activity on behalf of Texas-Adams was astounding; he was constantly back and forth all over the country picking up and delivering stock certificates, money and instructions. He signed innumerable checks and documents, and testimony indicated he was active in Denver in the trading of Texas-Adams stock for Empire interest certificates. While the heavy weight of the evidence would seem to indicate he was a "follower" rather than a "leader," this is a far cry from raising a doubt as to lack of criminal knowledge.

Mittelman, both at trial and here on appeal, has attempted the Herculean task of arguing away every single bit of damaging evidence produced by the government. We have carefully considered his extended discussions of the trial evidence but cannot agree there was any real doubt as to his guilt. Any conclusion of Mittelman's innocence 11 Especially convincing, in this regard, was the testimony of the Longview, Texas, oilman, John C. Robbins, Jr., J. A. 816a, one of the few important witnesses who could not be impeached in any way by the hint of fraudulent involvement on his own part.

---

must rest upon the hypothesis that Holland and Carroll, the moving parties in Homestead Oil & Uranium, plus Kimmes, a Denver broker and co-conspirator, perjured themselves; that Harrison Miller, a New York broker, was mistaken as to dates when he testified that Mittelman vouched for Jannis in mid-November of 1955; that Purcell, an experienced securities attorney, was mistaken in his testimony concerning Mittelman and the Empire transaction; and that Mittelman was unbelievably hornswoggled by McCarthy due to an incredible naivete on the part of an experienced attorney.

It is true that some apparently damning evidence has been convincingly explained away. The overall involvement, however, is clearly shown. The Jannis, Empire and Comigu opinion letters, asserting the free transferability of those shares, are not adequately explained. Long after he concededly knew the truth about Jannis, Mittelman sold 5,000 shares of unregistered stock in Jannis' name for the account of his sister. Defendant's letter of April 30, 1956 to the stock transfer company stating that 150,000 shares of Texas-Adams being issued to L. W. Ltd., a dummy corporation of which Mittelman was vice-president, was for part payment of the purchase price of United States Sulphur Company is particularly damning. Despite appellant's meticulous analysis of the evidence, it is hard to see how the jury could have found Mittelman anything but guilty.[12] 12 On this point, appellant Mittelman urges his acquittal on some 30 odd counts while he was convicted on only Counts Two and Fifty. While his inconsistency contention will be discussed infra, it will here suffice to point out that there were factors, other than directly relevant evidentiary ones, which may have led the jury to convict on only two counts. The collateral consequences to Mittelman, an attorney, may have weighed with the jury—plus the fact that at trial he produced an impressive array of character witnesses.

---

B. The "Broker" Defendants

Gordon, Goldberg and Reicher, the stockholders in Philip Gordon & Co., Inc., all contend the proof against them was insufficient to warrant submission to the jury. Guilty verdicts on the three substantive counts and the conspiracy count from which they appeal all involve use of the mail to effect wilful and knowing sale of unregistered securities. The proof is clear that no Texas-Adams stock was ever registered—and that defendants knew that the particular certificates involved in Counts 46-8 were not registered. There were, however, opinion letters claiming the shares to be exempt from registration. Two basic elements thus remain: Were the shares exempt? If not, does the record adequately prove the necessary knowledge on the part of these defendants to support the element of wilfulness? We hold that, while the shares should have been registered, there was insufficient proof from which the jury legitimately could have inferred wilfulness and criminal intent.

All the stock involved in the three substantive counts here involved stems from the two million shares issued to Gully in connection with the Comigu transaction. Philip Gordon & Co., Inc. received them for sale from Castagna. The Mittelman legal opinion letters concerning these shares asserted the stock was exempt from registration and free for trading; the opinion was based on S.E.C. Rule 133 which provides that for purposes of the criminal statute dealing with sale of unregistered securities no "sale" shall be deemed to have been made "so far as the stockholders of a corporation are concerned where * * * a plan or agreement for a statutory merger or consolidation or reclassification of securities, or a proposal for the transfer of assets of such corporation to another prison in consideration of the issuance of securities" is approved by a binding majority of the stockholders. This exemption, which "has permitted the offering of literally billions of securities without registration" [13] probably fits the circumstances of the Comigu transaction; this court has specifically held, however, that the Rule 133 exemption applies only to the original exchange in which stock is transferred to the merged corporation's stockholders—and not to later resales if they otherwise are within the registration requirement. S.E.C. v. Culpepper, 270 F. 2d 241, 247-8 (2 Cir. 1959); see also S.E.C. v. Mono-Kearsage Consol. Mining Co., 167 F. Supp. 248 (D. Utah 1958).

Similarly, none of the statutory exemptions are here applicable.[14] Philip Gordon & Co., Inc. and the individual defendants are clearly "dealers" within the purview of the 13. Loss, Securities Regulations (1951), page 336.

---

14. "The provisions of section 77e of this title shall not apply to any of the following transactions:

"(1) Transactions by any person other than an issuer, underwriter, or dealer; transactions by an issuer not involving any public offering; or transactions by a dealer (including an underwriter no longer acting as an underwriter in respect of the security involved in such transaction), except transactions taking place prior to the expiration of forty days after the first date upon which the security was bona fide offered to the public by the issuer or by or through an underwriter and transactions in a security as to which a registration statement has been filed taking place prior to the expiration of forty days after the effective date of such registration statement or prior to the expiration of forty days after the first date upon which the security was bona fide offered to the public by the issuer or by or through an underwriter after such effective date, whichever is later (excluding in the computation of such forty days any time during which a stop order issued under section 77h of this title is in effect as to the security), and except transactions as to securities constituting the whole or a part of an unsold allotment to or subscription by such dealer as a participant in the distribution of such securities by the issuer or by or through an underwriter.

"(2) Brokers' transactions, executed upon customers' orders on any exchange or in the open or counter market, but not the solicitation of such orders." Section 4 of the Securities Act of 1933, as amended; 15 U. S. C. §77d.

Act;[15] their sales would have been exempt transactions, therefore, only if made more than forty days "after the first date upon which the security was bona fide offered to the public." The purchases of these shares by Gordon & Co. were from Castagna, nominee for controlling interests of Texas-Adams, the issuer. The Act defines Castagna himself as an "issuer" under those circumstances—which fact, in turn, made the broker defendants technically "underwriters."[16] Thus, by recourse to the definitional sections of the Act, we can circuitously, but inevitably, reach the otherwise immediately apparent truth—that the sales by Philip Gordon & Co., Inc. were the first public offerings of those shares, thereby rendering inapplicable the "forty day" exemption. Finally, since the defendants bought and sold the stock for their own accounts, the exemption accorded "brokers' transactions" is unavailable.

Since all of the government's evidence tending to tie the brokers into the overall conspiracy is relevant, in some degree, on the substantive counts for sale of unregistered securities,[17] the sufficiency of the evidence on both types of 15 "The term 'dealer' means any person who engages either for all or part of his time, directly or indirectly as agent, broker, or principal, in the business of offering, buying, selling or otherwise dealing or trading in securities issued by another person." Securities Act of 1933, §2(12); 15 U. S. C. §77b(12).

---

16 "The term 'underwriter' means any person who has purchased from an issuer with a view to, or offers or sells for an issuer in connection with, the distribution of any security, or participates or has a direct or indirect participation in the direct or indirect underwriting of any such undertaking; but such term shall not include a person whose interest is limited to a commission from an underwriter or dealer not in excess of the usual and customary distributors' or sellers' commission. As used in this paragraph the term 'issuer' shall include, in addition to an issuer, any person directly or indirectly controlling or controlled by the issuer, or any person under direct or indirect common control with the issuer." Securities Act of 1933, §2(11); 15 U. S. C. §77b(11).

17 The sales in question, as noted, were of Gully-Comigu stock, a transaction which took place rather late in the short lifetime of Texas-Adams' greatest activity. Therefore, a showing that the brokers were offenses may be treated together. Reicher was a 50% stockholder of the brokerage house, Gordon and Goldberg evenly dividing the remaining one half interest. Philip Gordon & Co., Inc. was not a big house and all three appellants were active in its management; Reicher and Goldberg supervised the sales force.

Chronologically, the government points first to the brokers' role in the sale of Texas-Adams to the McCarthy group. Although the proof failed to show directly that these defendants aided or knew of the arrangements by which they were paid out of the treasury of Texas-Adams, much is made of the fact that the buyers apparently used, two days running, the corporate seal in furtherance of their fraud. A Gordon & Co. employee testified that the seal was ordinarily kept in the office safe but he could not vouch for its presence at any one particular time. The attorney who handled the sale for the brokers could not remember whether he had given or loaned the seal to the buyers.

The second installment of $20,000 on the purchase price of Texas-Adams was raised through the sale of a large bloc of shares, for investment, to one Jack Baker. Part of this bloc, a certificate for 50,000 shares, was sold to Baker by Philip Gordon & Co. for the account of American Montana and the actual payment of the $20,000 was made directly from Baker to Goldberg.[18]

Other evidence relied upon by the government includes the fact that Goldberg sanctioned the cashing of one check payable to Jannis although such was not the usual pracprivy to or aware of a consistent course of fraudulent conduct on the part of the officers or attorneys of Texas-Adams would be relevant to the issue of their good faith in trading the unregistered securities.

---

18 The balance of the agreed upon purchase price for the investment shares was paid by Baker, in two smaller checks, to Meredith and Lawrence Rosen.

tice of the house; that Goldberg, in a hotel meeting with Kimmes and the chief officers of Texas-Adams, "suggested" a broker bonus arrangement to help stabilize the price of Texas-Adams shares near the one dollar mark; that Goldberg and Gordon questioned a salesman for a rival brokerage firm concerning the latter's source of "cheap shares" and that the salesman remarked that he smelled something "rotten"; and that the brokers, in pushing the sales of Texas-Adams stock, disseminated fraudulent literature put out by the alleged co-conspiratorial accountant and public relations firm. Finally, the government presses upon us the more than 500,000 shares sold to the public by Philip Gordon & Co., Inc. under various opinion letters- shares emanating from almost all of the various "transactions" of Texas-Adams—and insists that the extent to which the defendants did rely, or were entitled to rely, on the opinion of counsel was for the jury to determine.

The course of conduct of the three brokers in selling so many shares proves little[19]—it merely presents, in multiple instances, the same question posed by the three substantive counts here in issue: Were the brokers justified in selling unregistered stock on the representation of counsel that such shares or transactions were exempt from the registration requirement?

The evidence that the buyers used a Texas-Adams seat in implementation of the takeover fraud is far too weak a base from which to infer guilty knowledge on the part of these defendants. The gaps are too broad and substantial. To hold the defendants on this evidence, it must be inferred that it was "the" seal, rather than a facsimile, that was used by Crosby; that the "defendants" (or one of them, with the blessing of the others) gave the seal over to the buyers; and that it was done with the intent to aid and abet the fraud. The government's evidence concerning the second installment payment through the sale of 50,000 shares of Texas-Adams held by American Montana is similarly weak and insubstantial. Appellee argues that the brokers "knew" Texas-Adams legitimately could not have declared such a large stock dividend to controlling American Montana only a few weeks after acquisition—and that American Montana would have paid the brokers directly if it had funds. The fallacies in this reasoning are clear. There are numerous transactions which might have been the base for legitimate issuance of this stock to the parent corporation; to state only the most obvious, American Montana might have transferred property, which they were loath to liquidate, to Texas-Adams as a means of obtaining stock, in turn to obtain funds, to pay the brokers.

---

[19] Aside from the extensive dealing in Texas Adams stock by defendant Philip Gordon & Co., Inc., four other brokerage firms, the majority of which were named as co-conspirators, sold either more shares than Gordon & Co. or almost as many. In addition to these houses "pushing" or "dealing in" the stock, Texas Adams was generally traded by many other brokerage firms during the period of the McCarthy leadership.

Since the broker appellants were a principal outlet for over the counter sales of Texas-Adams stock, there is nothing strange about "hotel meetings" with the top officers of the corporation. The two meetings testified to prove little. The testimony concerning the first of those occasions shows only a concern on the part of the defendants that the market in Texas-Adams, in which they had considerable personal stake,[20] was being seriously undercut by "cheap stock" from unknown (to them) sources. The effect of Goldberg's suggestion of a bonus share arrangement at the latter meeting is compromised by the fact that Gordon & Co. bought or sold none of the Empire stock in question and received none of the bonus shares.[21] Moreover, there was evidence that in this area of speculative mining, oil and uranium stocks in the over the counter market, the selling price of a security almost never has any relation to its intrinsic value and that substantial commission and bonus arrangements are the rule rather than the exception.[22]

20 In most instances, apparently, these defendants were buying and selling on their own accounts—with attendant risk to themselves—rather than acting merely as brokers.

Concerning the mailing of the fraudulent literature furnished by McCarthy et al., the record shows that it was standard procedure in the over the counter market for mailings to emanate from the brokers rather than the corporation. Jealous guarding of customer lists by the brokerage houses caused this practice. The claim that the defendants, as ex-controllers of Texas-Adams, should have known of the falsity of one assertion in the "Report to the Stockholders" is more serious. We believe, however, the single sentence in question was sufficiently ambiguous so that defendants were not required, at the peril of criminal liability, to challenge its accuracy.

As to the substantive counts alone, evidence is similarly lacking to refute appellants' apparent reliance on the representations of counsel. It is key here that the government nowhere showed that the brokers knew the details of the 21 The government suggestion here is that this is explained by the fact that the price stabilization needed was a purely local problem in Denver. This overlooks the fact that by far the largest number of bonus shares went to a Pittsburgh brokerage firm.

---

22 Good examples of this practice may be found in the record of the instant case. Both Texas Adams and Homestead Oil & Uranium Co. were originally financed by a public issue, under a Regulation "A" exemption, to the tune of $300,000. Contemporaneous with the organization of the corporation and the public issue of the bloc of shares, the organizers and often the underwriters are issued investment shares greatly swelling the outstanding capital stock. When the large underwriting commissions on these speculative issues are then paid, the public's stock has by that time been effectively "watered" often by more than 50%.

alleged transfer from Gully to Castagna—or that they knew the latter's relation to and probable domination by McCarthy.[23] Thus there was no evidence that the brokers knew or should have known they were "underwriters" in terms of the Securities Act. Mittelman's original opinion letter to Philip Gordon & Co. concerning the Gully stock relied solely on Rule 133's special no-registration treatment for statutory mergers, etc.; his later letter to the brokers' counsel, however, stressed a combination of an original Rule 133 exemption and subsequent freedom to trade which allegedly arose because they were no longer "control stocks." While such a theory is probably invalid in light of this court's decision in the Culpepper case, supra, we cannot say that on its face the legal opinions tendered were so patently erroneous as to permit the jury to speculate on the good faith of the defendants.

It is always a difficult task in a complicated omnibus conspiracy case like this one to decide at what point the government has produced enough evidence against individual defendants to put their fates in the hands of the jury. Because of the tremendous potential for collateral prejudice inherent in these cases, however, the courts must be extremely scrupulous in sorting out the evidence against single defendants and weighing the same—divorced from the all too often damning influence of the background conspiracy. The case against these three defendants presents a peculiarly difficult problem in this regard because the prime issue is one of guilty knowledge and criminal intent. It is undisputed that the brokers' acts in fact furthered the conspiracy; the claim is persuasively made, however, that they were merely "doing business as usual" and, to

---

23 In contrast to other brokers named as co-conspirators, there was a complete failure to connect these broker defendants with any of the fraudulent transactions by McCarthy and company underlying the eventual public offerings of stock their best knowledge, according to acceptable standards of that business. The statutory and administrative regulatory scheme over this area is far from a model of clarity; such a situation is aggravated when, as here, criminal liability is based on the failure to comply with the law. We think it is all too facile an answer for the government to rely on the experience and supposed expertise of these brokers; the fact is that they purported to rely on opinion letters of an attorney, whose expertise is presumed to be even greater. The scanty extrinsic evidence produced by the government against these defendants implies guilt only if we first assume guilty knowledge and purpose; when used to prove that basic element of the crime it is neither substantial nor convincing. The trial court erred in not directing a verdict of acquittal on all counts for defendants Gordon, Goldberg, Reicher, and Philip Gordon & Co., Inc.

III. The Conduct of the Trial

The four remaining appellants have advanced to this court a large number and wide variety of alleged errors which, they claim, warrant reversal of their convictions. Although almost all of the appellants complain of what they characterize as a prolix, rambling and disconnected presentation of the government's case, only Pettit and Mittelman strongly urge upon us the contention that they were unduly harmed by a combination of poor and confusing presentation by the government and prejudicial conduct on the part of the trial court.

As noted, the trial was a long one of three and one half months. Our own sketchy and incomplete statement of the facts gives some indication of the breadth and complexity of the schemes submitted to the jury for digestion. While the proof, as organized and offered by the government, may not have met some hypothetical concept of perfection, the presentation of the case was, on the whole, fairly orderly and logical. Difficulties presented by the very scope of the alleged frauds and by reason of the fact that the testimony of some witnesses was relevant to more than one aspect of the case were inevitably multiplied by problems, especially troublesome in a long trial with many cross-examining defendants, concerning the ready availability and procurement of witnesses.[24] Upon our reading of the record, we find that any direct or veiled charge of actual misconduct leveled against the government's attorneys is wholly without substance.

Complaints about the trial court's general handling of the case stem primarily from the same source of difficulty. Appellants tell us that "everything" was let in "subject to connection"; that in his charge Judge MacMahon made a few factual errors and generally favored the government in his summation of the relevant facts; and, finally, that the charge which took some eight hours to deliver was too long and confusing. Some specific claims of error will be discussed, infra; it here suffices to say merely that there is, practically, little a trial court can do in these cases except take large portions of evidence subject to connection. Moreover, there was presented in the instant case overwhelming independent evidence connecting each of the remaining appellants to the alleged frauds and to the conspiracy. The factual charge of the court was, in general, amply supported by the record; any small errors made are explained by the long and complicated nature of the case—and neutralized by the court's cautionary instruction to the jury.

---

24 This problem was most acutely presented here because witnesses had to be subpoenaed from Denver, Pittsburgh, North Carolina, Texas and other farflung parts of the country.

The attack on the length of the charge is frivolous. Just as this type of trial, almost of necessity, must fall short of perfection in clearly and concisely presenting all the issues to the jury, the court's charge is inevitably similarly infirm. It may be true that the concentration span of a "real world" jury is, like that of any other twelve humans, a limited one. So long, however, as our appellate practice places so much weight on the hypothetical effect of a judge's charge, see dissenting opinion of Judge Frank in United States v. Farina, 184 F. 2d 18, 21 (2 Cir. 1950), extended instructions to the jury in many cases are a necessity.[25] That the instant case, with a transcript approaching ten thousand pages and nine individual defendants accused on various charges of a fifty count indictment, falls within the aforementioned category is only too evident.

Examination of the record shows that the charge of prejudicial conduct by the lower court is without foundation. Defendant Mittelman particularly complains of alleged unfair limitation of his cross-examination and summation. Administering a trial involving nine separate defendants and their attendant counsel is at best a trying task. Further, it here appears that the attorney for Mr. Mittelman had had consistent difficulty in marshalling his relevant facts and in conducting non-repetitious questioning of the witnesses. Under the circumstances, the trial judge was acting completely within his discretion and in furtherance of his duty to expedite the trial when he cut off Mittelman's attorney after he had gone more than a half hour over his self-requested five hour summation period. See United States v. Campisi, —— F. 2d —— (2 Cir. July, 1961).

---

25 It should be noted that Judge MacMahon handled the problem well under the circumstances. The jury was given a short break at regular intervals of approximately one hour. These recesses came at logical stopping points in the presentation.

IV. Attacks on the Indictment

Appellants' general complaint that the indictment was unforgivably prolix and a "pleading monstrosity" is closely akin to their objections to the trial presentation by the prosecution and the judge's lengthy charge. The government can hardly be faulted for prolixity when it appears that the very complexity and deviousness of the alleged swindles are the basic causes of confusion. Just as the ingenuity of the white collar criminal and quasi-criminal is mirrored in the complicated regulation of the securities industry,[26] the indictment in this case is a rather faithful picture of the activity charged to the defendants. Objection to use of the "incorporation by reference" device is merely a quibble; surely there is enough governmental waste without requiring complete reproduction, from count to count, of all allegedly relevant pleadings previously enumerated.

More specific assaults on the indictment are made. Mittelman argues that Counts One and Two are repugnant because the takeover scheme is incorporated by reference into the later count while Count One does not name him as a defendant; his alternative argument is that if there is no repugnancy then Count Two is of necessity duplicitous —and that his conviction on that count must fail on any account. Closely related to appellant Mittelman's attack on the first two counts is the argument made by all defendants that there was a fatal variance between the pleading and proof on the conspiracy count. Relying on Kot-

---

26 Compare the field of federal taxation where the combination of a highly sophisticated tax bar and an obstinate if slightly less quick legislature have resulted in our present tax laws teakos v. United States, 328 U. S. 750 (1946), they assert that the government proof tended to establish not one scheme, but a multiplicity of disjointed, unrelated criminal ventures—at most, a fatally amorphous "conspiracy to do evil." In support of this argument, they magnify the fact that some of the alleged parts of the "scheme" did not accrue directly to personal interests of all the defendants.

Appellants' reliance on Kotteakos is misplaced. The Supreme Court there decided only that a variance in the proof was prejudicial. That multiple conspiracies rather than one had been proven was conceded by the government. In that case one defendant had engaged in a number of quite isolated transactions, each with a different co-defendant, to obtain loans from government agencies on false representations. The Court of Appeals, sub nom. United States v. Lekacos, 151 F. 2d 170, 173 (2 Cir. 1945), aptly analogized the case to a fence who disposes of goods stolen by a number of independent persons; the fact that they know him to be a fence does not mean all conspire together.

The proof in the instant case reveals a far more integrated scheme. The government argues correctly that the evidence establishes, basically, a central plan to effect the issuance and sale of worthless or grossly overpriced unregistered corporate securities to an uninformed and deluded investing public. The implementation of corporate "deals" and mergers as a cover for the fraud was an almost constant factor; the use of both kickbacks and resales by compliant dummy corporations—plus the issuance of stock for falsely declared consideration—reflects a relatively consistent, if varied, pattern of operation. Recurrent personal misrepresentations dovetailed neatly with the fraudulent publicity campaign to create a false public image of Texas-Adams. Mittelman's opinion letters consistently supplied still another necessary element in the success of the fraud. The non-broker defendants indisputably worked together in the Texas-Adams venture; indeed, the only possible questions raised at trial concerned the extent to which certain of these defendants either were duped by or blindly followed the others.

A mail fraud scheme consisting of a large number of similar transactions, conducted by a constant nucleus with differing subordinates, was held basically a single conspiracy in United States v. Cohen, 145 F. 2d 82, 87-8 (2 Cir. 1945). We have also declared with reference to determining whether the proof is of one or two conspiracies that when a conspirator "embarks upon a criminal venture of indefinite outline, he takes his chances as to its content and membership, so be it that they fall within the common purposes as he understands them." United States v. Andolschek, 142 F. 2d 503, 507 (2 Cir. 1944). It is certainly no problem that not all the details were formulated at the outset; "A single scheme to defraud may involve a multiplicity of ways and means of action and procedure. It may be such that the complete execution of it would involve the commission of more than one criminal offense. Mere details may be changed and the scheme remain the same." Mansfield v. United States, 155 F. 2d 952 (5 Cir. 1946). Whether a scheme is one conspiracy or several is primarily a jury question, since it is a question of fact as to the nature of the agreement. There was ample evidence here to justify a finding that the non-broker defendants were a part of an overall scheme to acquire and exploit a public corporation—for the ultimate purpose of selling to the public unregistered common stock. See Developments—Criminal Conspiracy, 72 Harv. L. Rev. 920, 929-30, 933 (1959); Note Federal Treatment of Multiple Conspiracies, 57 Colum. L. Rev. 387, 393 (1957).

Mittelman's claim of duplicity in Count Two founders on the very nature of the mail fraud offense—with its attendant "scheme or artifice," 18 U. S. C. §1341. The government, in presenting its case, must of necessity offer evidence as to the acts of the defendants which make up the relevant scheme. Aside from the Count One takeover transaction, the government's proof in this case showed (together with acts which were, aside from the scheme, innocent) any number of separate "crimes" under state or federal law. It is difficult to see how the common law duplicity doctrine can retain any meaning or vigor within the context of this particular statutory offense.[27] As long as the defendants clearly are "charged" with only one offense (i.e., the mailing in furtherance of the scheme), the count is not duplicitous. See Queens v. United States, 221 F. 2d 351 (5 Cir. 1955); Weiss v. United States, 122 F. 2d 675, 680 (5 Cir. 1941); United States v. McAlpine, 129 F. 2d 737 (7 Cir. 1942).

The fact that Mittelman was not named as a defendant in Count One—while the takeover fraud was pleaded as part of the Count Two scheme—does not make these two counts repugnant. The takeover scheme charged in the first count was a localized, short lived offense completed in September of 1955. The "grand scheme" charged in Counts 2-32 was of much longer duration and encompassed a much broader scope of activity—including the acquisition of control of a publicly held corporation. The fact that the government did not charge Mittelman with direct criminal responsibility, as a principal or otherwise, for the takeover of Texas-Adams does not prevent it from accusing him of knowing participation in the larger scheme, which took in many acts for which he may not have been directly responsible.

---

27 This, of course, does not mean that the government is free to offer evidence of other unrelated "crimes" under the guise of the "scheme or artifice" of the mail fraud offense.

V. Rulings on Evidence

Considering the length and difficult nature of the trial, appellants press surprisingly few claims of error concerning disputed rulings on evidence. Mittelman complains that evidence of the takeover fraud was erroneously admitted against himself and Meredith who were not named in the first count; he further claims error in the admission of the testimony of Holland, Carroll, Sanders and Zavoico concerning the period of the Homestead-Ajax negotiations before the McCarthy group gained control of Texas-Adams. Pettit asserts the court erred in allowing in, against himself, a letter addressed to Jannis by Crosby—and also claims that evidence concerning money paid by Texas-Adams to the Worth Investment Co., of which Pettit was an officer, was inadmissible.

Mittelman's argument concerning the evidence of the fraud in the acquisition of control of Texas-Adams is disposed of by our prior discussion of the interrelationship of Counts One and Two. The pre-Texas-Adams transactions, although not pleaded in the indictment, were relevant in several respects. The evidence showed an early connection not only with McCarthy but also with Crosby; it indicated the known falsity of one of Mittelman's opinion letters written to cover stock issued to Jannis; it was relevant to the question of Mittelman's knowledge of the falsity of the representation, in the Texas-Adams "Report to the Stockholders," that Homestead had a $140,000 treasury at the time of the merger. In some aspects the testimony, especially a charge by Holland that Mittelman had apparently failed to return $19,000 of Homestead funds, was quite prejudicial and might have been excluded; as it was relevant to important aspects of the case, however, the court acted within its discretion in admitting it Pettit's objection to the Crosby-Jannis letter, which cited Crosby, McCarthy, Mittelman and Pettit as principals for whom Jannis had acted as nominee, is without merit. When admitted, although he allowed it only against Crosby, Judge MacMahon rather ambiguously told the jury that later on, if the conspiracy was sufficiently established, it could be considered against other defendants. Defendant did not object to this. Any possible prejudice in connection with the original instruction was cured in the court's charge, wherein the jury was specifically instructed that "it is evidence against Crosby only and may not be considered by you against any other defendant."

The Worth Investment Co. was a corporation organized in Colorado by McCarthy, Pettit and Thomas Hudson, the Denver attorney and co-conspirator who most of the present defendants contend was, with McCarthy, the moving force in Texas-Adams. Worth was organized to finance conditional sales contracts for a vending machine company in which Hudson was somehow interested. The damaging aspect of this evidence was that $50,000 of Texas-Adams funds were sent west to finance the Worth Investment operations. The Worth Investment Co. episode was not pleaded in the indictment and Pettit claims it was wholly irrelevant and prejudicial as proof of another crime.

The evidence was properly admitted. Proof of personal use of Texas-Adams funds was highly relevant to the issue of criminal intent and knowing complicity in the fraud and conspiracy. It is somewhat ironic that while Pettit spends a considerable portion of his brief arguing the alleged fact that there is no evidence that he personally gained at the expense of Texas-Adams shareholders, he at the same time asserts that evidence showing use of $50,000 of Texas-Adams funds to finance outside personal business interests is irrelevant.

VI. The Charge to the Jury

The challenged portions of the charge include that concerning the Worth Investment Co. and the instructions on the proper weight to be given Mittelman's character evidence.

After reciting to the jury its recollection of the facts surrounding the Worth Investment episode, the court instructed the jury thus:

> "If you find, beyond a reasonable doubt, that one of the defendants, while an officer or director of Texas-Adams, caused or planned to cause, money, stock or other property belonging to the corporation to be paid to him, to his fellow officers or directors, or to a private corporation belonging to him or them with intent to benefit himself, and with knowledge that the corporation was not receiving, or would not receive fair return for what it would pay out, you may conclude that he violated his trust and committed a fraud."

As has been noted, the indictment did not specifically charge any of the defendants with criminal liability on account of the Worth transaction; the evidence was properly admitted as relevant to criminal intent. Upon this formulation, we think the trial court's charge was somewhat ambiguous in failing to delineate clearly the thrust and purpose of the Worth Investment evidence. The jurors should have been instructed that if they found the circumstances of the $50,000 transfer to Worth to have been fraudulent, they could then weigh that fact when considering the good or bad faith of the defendants involved concerning the actual crimes specifically charged in the indictment.

The lower court's failure to clarify completely the role of the Worth evidence cannot, however, be deemed cause for reversal. The infirmity pointed to is encompassed in one sentence of an eight hour charge. It is important to note that the jury was not told it could convict on the basis of the Worth evidence—merely that "(y)ou may conclude that he violated his trust and committed a fraud," a proposition which is technically correct. Elsewhere in its charge, the court spelled out in detail the necessary elements for conviction on the mail fraud counts—presence of the scheme to defraud, the need to establish the complicity of each defendant with independent evidence, and the use of the mails. The court was similarly thorough on the Securities Act counts and the conspiracy. The error here was one merely of form and cannot be deemed prejudicial.

Appellant Mittelman's attack on the charge as to character evidence, noted in the margin,[28] is without merit. Whatever the validity of the traditional distinction, the court correctly instructed the jury on the role of character evidence as going to prove community attitudes rather than per-28 "There has been testimony as to the previous good character of the defendant Mittelman. You should consider such evidence of good character, together with all the other facts and all the other evidence in determining his guilt or innocence. Evidence of good character may, in itself, create a reasonable doubt where, without such evidence, no reasonable doubt would exist.

---

"But if from all the evidence you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that Mittelman is guilty, a showing that he previously enjoyed a reputation of good character does not justify or excuse the offense, and you should not acquit him merely because you believe that he has been a person of good repute.

"It may be that those with whom he had come in contact previously have been misled, or that he did not reveal to them his real character or acts.

"The testimony of a character witness is not to be regarded by you as expressing the witness' personal opinion of Mittelman's character, nor is it to be taken by you as the witness' opinion as to his guilt or innocence.

"The guilt or innocence of Mittelman is for you, and you alone, to determine."

sonal belief. Finally, the appellant attempts to isolate a single sentence of the charge as incorrectly stating the law: "But if from all the evidence you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that Mittelman is guilty, a showing that he previously enjoyed a reputation of good character does not justify or excuse the offense, and you should not acquit him merely because you believe he has been a person of good repute." When read alone, this sentence would appear to be a questionable statement of the role of character evidence in the jury's deliberation and might call for reversal. Searway v. United States, 184 Fed. 716 (8 Cir. 1910); United States v. Klass, 166 F. 2d 373 (3 Cir. 1948). In the paragraph immediately preceding this statement, however, the jury was clearly instructed that it should consider evidence of good character, together with all other evidence, in determining whether guilt had been proven beyond a reasonable doubt. The court further specifically told the jury that evidence of good character, alone, may create a reasonable doubt. In this context, it is clear that the court's reference to "all the evidence" in the challenged sentence included the evidence of good reputation—and that appellant's cited cases, supra, are inapplicable.

VII. McCarthy's Guilty Plea

All of the appellants assert the trial court erred prejudicially in failing to grant motions for a mistrial when co-defendant McCarthy pleaded guilty toward the end of the first week of trial. The change of plea was accepted out of the presence of the jury; because counsel for most of the defendants felt a cautionary instruction would only serve to call the jury's attention to—and emphasize—the guilty plea, the court did not inform the jury of the circumstances concerning McCarthy's subsequent absence from the case and courtroom. The court did, however, charge them at length concerning the proper means of individually determining the guilt or innocence of each defendant.

Three weeks after the jury returned with its verdict attorney Garlock, counsel for Mittelman, moved for a new trial, which motion was joined in by other defendants, on the strength of affidavits executed by Mr. Garlock and his wife. The affidavits asserted that the Garlocks had encountered by chance, four days after the conclusion of the trial, one of the jurors in the case. The juror allegedly told the attorney that the jury had heard radio accounts and had read newspaper reports of the guilty plea; that said newspapers were brought into the jury room where they were discussed by members of the panel; and that the juror ventured the opinion that McCarthy's plea "in effect said that the other defendants were also guilty." The court denied the motions for a new trial and also declined to hold a hearing to question the jurors concerning the effect on their decision of the change in plea.

It was not error to refuse to grant a mistrial when McCarthy pleaded guilty. Certainly the guilty plea cannot be used as evidence against the remaining defendants, Babb v. United States, 218 F. 2d 538 (5 Cir. 1955); United States v. Hall, 178 F. 2d 853 (2 Cir. 1950); United States v. Toner, 173 F. 2d 140 (3 Cir. 1949); but see Grunberg v. United States, 145 Fed. 81, 86 (1 Cir. 1906). But the federal courts have uniformly held it not error, if proper cautionary instructions are given, for the jury to be informed during trial that one or more defendants have pleaded guilty, or even for the jury to be present when the pleas are entered. Wood v. United States, 279 F. 2d 359 (8 Cir. 1960); Davenport v. United States, 260 F. 2d 591 (9 Cir. 1958); Richards v. United States, 193 F. 2d 554 (10 Cir. 1951); Schliefer v. United States, 288 Fed. 368 (3 Cir. 1923). Appellants attempt to distinguish these cases on the strength of McCarthy's counsel's strong opening to the jury and becau-

McCarthy "held himself out" as innocent at the start of trial. Such a distinction is meaningless; all defendants who start trial "hold themselves out" as innocent and the fervor or effectiveness of an opening statement cannot call for a different result. As in United States v. Falcone, 109 F. 2d 579, 582 (2 Cir. 1940), "The existence of some kind of conspiracy was proved beyond peradventure, and the only important issue was whether these appellants were connected with the enterprise." The appellants' presentation of their cases, generally heaping all possible blame on McCarthy, strongly supports the thesis that there was no resultant prejudice from the change of plea.

The question raised by the denial of defendants' motion for a new trial based on the jury's knowledge and use of news accounts of the McCarthy plea is more difficult. Despite Lord Mansfield's original flat prohibition of impeachment by jurors of their verdict, Vaise v. Delaval, 1 T. R. 11, 99 E. R. 944 (K. B. 1785), the government properly concedes that there is no bar to admitting jury testimony to prove the fact they read the newspaper, Mattox v. United States, 146 U. S. 140 (1892). But it seriously contends we cannot consider testimony by jurors as to the actual effect the papers had on their decision, if any, and that this distinction is in accord with the opinion in Mattox. McDonald v. Pless, 238 U. S. 264 (1914), expressed a still more hostile attitude toward the admission of jury testimony to impeach verdicts, barring not only testimony as to matters solely within the knowledge of each individual juror but also matters known to the jury in common but not to outsiders, such as the fact that their verdict was reached by averaging the damage awards each thought proper. The Court had earlier stated, in Hyde v. United States, 225 U. S. 347, 384 (1912), that jurors will not be heard on matters of impeachment provable solely by their own testimony and not subject to corroboration. McDonald and Hyde were cited with approval by the Supreme Court as late as 1953, Stein v. New York, 346 U. S. 156, 178, for the statement that jurors will not be heard to testify their verdict was a compromise.

In Jorgensen v. York Ice Machinery Corp., 160 F. 2d 432 (2 Cir. 1947), this court indicated doubt as to the rule against impeachment and placed its decision sustaining a verdict which affidavits asserted to have been reached by majority vote in order to permit the foreman to go home in a family crisis, rather on the ground that the irregularity was not such as to call for upsetting the verdict. But we have since refused to hear jurors' testimony that they relied on legal knowledge imparted to them in another case, Rotondo v. Isthmian S.S. Co., 243 F. 2d 581 (1957). We there stated the rule as permitting testimony that evidence reached the jury outside court, but as excluding testimony as to "the reasons that in fact induced them to find their verdict." 243 F. 2d 581, at 583.

The juror's testimony that he interpreted McCarthy's plea as implicating the remaining defendants and that the verdict was influenced in fact would thus not be admissible. This is what Mattox stated; it is what we held in Rotondo. Marshall v. United States, 360 U. S. 310 (1959), is no authority to the contrary. There the trial judge before verdict polled the jury to obtain assurance they would not be influenced by the offending news article; the Supreme Court did not order a second inquiry after verdict but decided the matter was of a nature too inflammatory not to have affected the jury. In Kroomann v. United States, 225 F. 2d 220 (6 Cir. 1955), a new trial was ordered, in part because the judge had reread to the entire jury an offending headline without quizzing them all as to whether it would affect them, but the events occurred before verdict rather than after. Even Wigmore, one of the McDonald rule's sharpest critics, who would permit jury testimony to attack compromise and quotient verdicts as well as to note extraneous influences, and would also permit asking the jury about probable effects before verdict, 8 Wigmore on Evidence §2350, draws the line on post-verdict motive testimony by jurors; he would invoke the parol evidence rule to exclude such inquiry, 8 Wigmore on Evidence §2349.

There are many cogent reasons militating against post-verdict inquiry into jurors' motives for decision. The jurors themselves ought not be subjected to harassment; the courts ought not be burdened with large numbers of applications mostly without real merit; the chances and temptations for tampering ought not be increased; verdicts ought not be made so uncertain. Whenever information erroneously reaches the ears of the jury in open court, the judge's instruction to disregard it may be disobeyed; yet it is not suggested that in such a case the jury ought be polled as to whether any of them relied on the forbidden knowledge. Even though presumably the jurors themselves know best, the question is determined, as is the question whether an error was prejudicial, on the basis of the nature of the matter and its probable effect on a hypothetical average jury. The same reasons apply when the improper knowledge reached the jury outside the courtroom. It was not error to refuse to examine the jurors as to their mental processes.

Stripped of the offered proof that the jury erroneously considered McCarthy's guilt as indicative of the guilt of the others, the question presented is virtually the same as on the motion for a mistrial. We assume that Mattox v. United States, supra, makes admissible the statement that the jurors read in the newspapers the accounts of the McCarthy plea. The unanimous Circuit Court authority that such a plea may be accepted in open court is implicit recognition, however, that the probable effect on the jury of such knowledge is not sufficiently harmful to require a new trial;

we agree. The situation here presented is a far cry from the infinitely more damaging information obtained by the jury in Marshall (defendant's own prior felony conviction) or in Mattox (two previous murders by the defendant; newspaper stated that the evidence was so conclusive that even the defendant's family had given up hope). Proper cautionary instructions were here given; the existence of the conspiracy itself was overwhelmingly proven; defendants at trial strove mightily to put all blame on McCarthy's shoulders; and, finally, the fact that two of the defendants were acquitted weighs against the conclusion that the jury was prejudicially affected.

VIII. The Jencks Act Claim

All of the appellants have joined in defendant Crosby's contention that the cross-examination of numerous government witnesses may have been unduly restricted because of the trial court's refusal to order produced for defense counsel certain "witness sheets" [29] and notes of interviews conducted by the two Assistant United States Attorneys who prosecuted the defendants. When demand was first made for these papers, the Court, in accordance with the procedure prescribed by the Supreme Court in Campbell v. United States, 365 U. S. 85 (1961), had both prosecutors take the stand; an extensive voir dire was held looking into the circumstances under which the notes were taken and the subsequent "witness sheets" prepared to determine whether the statements in question were "substantially verbatim." 18 U. S. C. §3500; Palmero v. United States, 360 U. S. 343 (1959). The Court decided that question in the negative and denied production to defense counsel; the notes and sheets were marked as Court Exhibits and were made part of the record on appeal.

29 According to testimony given by the two Assistant United States Attorneys who tried the case for the government, handwritten notes were first taken of interviews with various witnesses. Afterward, typed "witness sheets" were prepared; although the notes were used as a base, often much of the notes was excised and other information and cross references to exhibits were added to result in a "final" of the direct examination of government witnesses.

The Supreme Court in Palmero held that in the light of both the language of the Jencks Act and its legislative history Congress had looked to the production of "only those statements which could properly be called the witness' own words," and which "reflect fully and fairly" what was said; a principal fear evinced was that of the distortion inherent in selective summaries and statements taken out of context. Finally, the Court stated that, within the Congressional framework, the "final decision as to production must rest • • • within the good sense and experience of the district judge • • • subject to the appropriately limited review of appellate courts." 360 U. S. 343, at 353.

With the Palermo case as a guide, inspection of the notes and "witness sheets," and a perusal of the voir dire examination of the government attorneys, make it clear that the trial court did not err in denying production. The prosecutors testified that there had been omissions in the taking of notes—that often no notes were taken for long periods of the interviews. They added there was no attempt to use the witnesses' own words; rather that these notes and jottings were prepared for the purpose of providing a general framework of reference from which this long and complicated case could be presented. They repeatedly answered in the negative the query whether the notes were verbatim. They testified that they made constant additions, interpolations and interpretative asides along with fragmentary recordations of the witnesses' stories.

The notes and sheets largely bear out the testimony of the United States Attorneys. The witness sheets prepared from the handwritten notes are not reports of interviews, much less substantially verbatim ones. They have all the appearance of being plans for the conduct of examination of witnesses at trial. Many are divided into topics by headings preceding sentence fragments to indicate the expected testimony of the witness; others are made into more complete sentences, separately stated to make the individual points desired to be elicited. In no sense can they be said to be "the witness' own words" or "continuous, narrative statements." Moreover, most of them contain material clearly not elicited from witnesses during the interview. Finally, the fact that the sheets were not prepared contemporaneously with the interviews, in conjunction with the testimony that they and the notes were far from identical, might alone warrant refusal to order production.

The case for production of the notes themselves is little stronger. Notes of interviews with many witnesses had been destroyed prior to trial; the prosecutors testified that this had been done in good faith, with no thought of subverting the Jencks Act, to prevent cluttering of files after the typewritten witness sheets had been prepared. See United States v. Thomas, 282 F. 2d 191 (2 Cir. 1960). They also stated that the remaining notes were substantially identical in form to those that had been destroyed. The notes, of course, cannot definitely corroborate the testimony of the prosecutors that substantial gaps existed in the note taking. In other respects, however, the notes which remain do substantiate the testimony given on voir dire. Generally, they appear to be composed of fairly cryptic references to the highlights of the respective interviews —to be used as reminders at trial. Even the notes contain some matter extrinsic to the interviews, cross references to the introduction of documentary evidence, identification of individual defendants, and occasional references to interrelationships with expected testimony of other witnesses. Finally, legislative history strongly indicates that one evil Congress sought to remedy in passing the Jencks Act was the possible production of notes made by government attorneys in preparing their case. 103 Cong. Rec. 15931 (1937) (Remarks of Senator Hruska); S. Rep. No. 981, U. S. Code Cong. & Adm. News, 85th Cong., 1st Sess., 1861, 1867.

IX Other Contentions

Some of appellants' other contentions may be dealt with summarily. Mittelman claims his Count Two conviction cannot stand because it is completely inconsistent with the jury's acquittal of him on Count Twelve. It is by now well settled, however, that "consistency in the verdict is not essential," Dunn v. United States, 284 U. S. 390, 393 (1931); Steckler v. United States, 7 F. 2d 59, 60 (2 Cir. 1925); defendant's attempt to distinguish these landmark decisions, and a host of other Federal cases, is completely without support in logic or precedent. Mittelman also claims that the "public offering" exemption incorporated into the criminal provision of the Securities Act is so amorphous as to make the criminal statute unconstitutionally vague—and that the Court below erred in its charge to the jury concerning the applicability of that exemption. While the term "public offering" in the statute alone might possibly be open to an attack on grounds of vagueness, the judicial gloss placed on this legislation by the Supreme Court in S.E.C. v. Ralston Purina Co., 346 U. S. 119 (1953), two years before the acts here charged, cured any defect which might have existed. As for the correctness of the charge, the trial court adopted most of the very language of the Supreme Court in Ralston Purina. See also Gilligan, Will & Co. v. S.E.C., 267 F. 2d 461 (2 Cir. 1959), certiorari denied 361 U. S. 896. Any of the numerous arguments raised by the four appellants whose convictions we are affirming not specifically answered in this opinion, are either totally lacking in merit or inapplicable to them.

The judgments of conviction of defendants Crosby, Meredith, Mittelman and Pettit are affirmed. The convictions of Goldberg, Gordon, Reicher and Philip Gordon & Co. are reversed and as to them the indictment is dismissed.

Opinion Denying Petition for Rehearing

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS

FOR THE SECOND CIRCUIT

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

Appellee,

v.

FRANCIS PETER CROSBY, J. LEONARD GOLDBERG, PHILIP GORDON, EUGENE MEREDITH, LEO B. MITTELMAN, WORTH PETTIT, JR., PAUL REICHER and PHILIP GORDON & COMPANY INC.,

Defendants-Appellants.

PETITIONS OF APPELLANTS MITTELMAN, MEREDITH AND PETTIT FOR REHEARING

Per Curiam:

The petitions for rehearing of appellants Mittelman, Meredith and Pettit are denied.

The following corrections may be made in the opinion:

On page 2686 of the slip opinion, line 15, strike out "They told Holland" and insert in place thereof "McCarthy told Holland".

On page 2697 of the slip opinion, last line of text, strike out "Any conclusion of Mittelman's innocence" and insert in place thereof "Any conclusion that the jury was mistaken in finding Mittelman's guilt established beyond a reasonable doubt."

On page 2715 of the slip opinion, line 2, strike out ", Mittelman".

H. J. F.
U. S. C. J.

J. J. S.
U. S. C. J.

H. E. W.
U. S. D. J.

6 November 1961

Judgment

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS

FOR THE SECOND CIRCUIT

At a Stated Term of the United States Court of Appeals, in and for the Second Circuit, held at the United States Courthouse in the City of New York, on the twenty-second day of August, one thousand nine hundred and sixty one.

Present:

HON. HENRY J. FRIENDLY
HON. J. JOSEPH SMITH,
Circuit Judges,

HON. HARRY E. WATKINS,
District Judge.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Plaintiff-Appellee

v.

LEO B. MITTELMAN, et al.,
Defendants-Appellants

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York.

This cause came on to be heard on the transcript of record from the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, and was argued by counsel.

On consideration whereof, it is now hereby ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the judgments of said District Court as to appellants Francis Peter Crosby, Eugene Meredith, Leo B. Mittelman, and Worth Pettit, Jr. be and they hereby are affirmed.

Further ordered, adjudged and decreed that the judgments of said District Court as to J. Leonard Goldberg, Philip Gordon, Paul Reicher and Philip Gordon & Company, Inc. be and they hereby are reversed and as to them the indictment is dismissed in accordance with the opinion of this court.

A. Daniel Fusaro
Clerk

LIBRARY
SUPREME COURT U. S.

Office-Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
DEC 6 1961
JOHN F. DAVIS, CLERK

Supreme Court of the United States

October Term, 1961

No. ...588

WORTH PETTIT, JR.,

Petitioner.

AGAINST

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SECOND CIRCUIT

FREDERICK W. SCHOLEM
Attorney for Petitioner.

LODER APPEAL PRESS, INC., 41 VESEY STREET, NEW YORK, N. Y. WOrth 2-0689

INDEX

	Page
The Opinion Below	2
The Grounds of Jurisdiction	2
Statutes Involved	2
Questions for Review	2
Statement of the Case	3
Reasons for Granting the Writ	13
Conclusion	14

Cases Cited

Kotteakos v. United States, 328 U. S. 750 (1946)	3, 13
Marshall v. United States, 360 U. S. 310 (1959)	2, 13
Schaffer v. U. S., 266 F. 2d 435; 362 U. S. 511	3, 13
United States v. Krulewitch, 145 F. 2d 76	3, 13

Statutes Cited

Title 18, U. S. C.:
Section 1342, 3	1, 2
Section 1341	1, 2
Section 371	2
Title 15, U. S. C.:
Sections 77e(a)(1), (2)	2
Section 77x	2

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM 1961

No. .....

WORTH PETTIT, JR.,

Petitioner,

AGAINST

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SECOND CIRCUIT

To the Chief Justice of the United States and the Associate Justices of the United States Supreme Court:

Petitioner[1] respectfully asks this Court to issue a writ of certiorari to review the final judgment of the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit which affirmed petitioner's conviction under Title 18, United States Code, Sections 1342 and 3; Title 18, United States Code, Sections 1341

[1] Three defendants are petitioning this Court in this case for writs of certiorari. There is no community of interest between them, and yet their interests are not necessarily in conflict. They have joined together to pay certain printing expenses common to all of them. They respectfully request this Court to consider the arguments and presentation of each as though made by all wherever and whenever applicable.

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM 1961

No. .....

WORTH PETTIT, JR.,

Petitioner,

AGAINST

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SECOND CIRCUIT

To the Chief Justice of the United States and the Associate Justices of the United States Supreme Court:

Petitioner[1] respectfully asks this Court to issue a writ of certiorari to review the final judgment of the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit which affirmed petitioner's conviction under Title 18, United States Code, Sections 1342 and 3; Title 18, United States Code, Sections 1341

[1] Three defendants are petitioning this Court in this case for writs of certiorari. There is no community of interest between them, and yet their interests are not necessarily in conflict. They have joined together to pay certain printing expenses common to all of them. They respectfully request this Court to consider the arguments and presentation of each as though made by all wherever and whenever applicable.

and 2; Title 15, United States Code, Sections 77e (a) (1), (a) (2) and 77x; and Title 18, United States Code, Section 371.

The Opinion Below

The Opinion of the Court of Appeals is reported at 274 F. 2d 928. A copy is annexed to the petition of Leo B. Mittelman for a similar writ submitted simultaneously herewith, and we respectfully refer this Court to his petition.

The Grounds of Jurisdiction

The grounds are the same as appear in Petitioner Mittelman's application to which this Court is respectfully referred.

Statutes Involved

The statutes involved are set forth in the petition of Leo B. Mittelman to which this Court is respectfully referred.

Questions for Review

1. Whether the failure of the Trial Court to grant a mistrial because of McCarthy's plea of guilty, or the failure of the Trial Court to hold a hearing on that question when evidence was presented to it, that the jury had disobeyed the Court's instructions in connection therewith, constituted reversible error. Marshall v. U. S., 360 U. S. 310 (1959).

2. Whether the admission of evidence as to Worth Investment Company constituted reversible error. U. S. v. Krulewitch, 145 F. 2d 76.

3. Whether there was a fatal variance between the pleading and the proof, and or the proof and the indictment. Kotteakos v. U. S., 328 U. S. 750 (1946).

4. Whether the receipt in evidence of the Crosby-Jannis letter (ex. 60-A) by the Trial Court without correctly and consistently instructing the jury that it was not competent evidence against petitioner, was reversible error.

5. Whether the reversal of the convictions of the broker defendants and a dismissal of the indictment against them requires reversal of petitioner's conviction and a new trial (Schaffer v. U. S., 266 F. 2d 435; 362 U. S. 511).

Statement of the Case

The indictment is in 50 counts. Said counts are detailed in the Mittelman petition to this Court, and this Court is respectfully referred to his statement in that regard. Petitioner was named as a defendant in all of said counts.

Judgment of conviction was rendered against petitioner on June 11, 1960 based on a jury verdict adjudging him guilty on 24 counts and innocent on 13 counts. He was convicted on Count 1 (charging the use of wire communications in furtherance of a scheme to defraud); Counts 2, 4, 5, 6, 7 and 9 through 22 (charging mail fraud); Counts 39, 40 and 43 (substantive violations of the Securities Act of 1933) and Count 50 (charging a conspiracy to sell unregistered securities by use of the mails). The Trial Court dismissed 13 counts.

Petitioner was sentenced to three years imprisonment and was placed on probation for an additional three year period. Petitioner was admitted to bail by the Trial Court, and his bail is still in effect.

Petitioner was tried with nine other individual defendants and two corporations. In addition, nineteen other persons were named as co-conspirators in Count 50, but were not indicted. The trial lasted almost four months. The transcript covers 9,000 pages. The Trial Court's charge consumed an entire day, and was delivered at the rate of 125 words per minute and purported to cover all applicable rules of law, and the marshalling of the facts.

The prosecutor's opening was intemperate and garbled and promised proof as to petitioner which was never realized, but the mere statement of which was extremely prejudicial.

The Trial Court ruled early in the case that all proof offered by the Government to which there was objection would be received subject to connection. The stage was thus set for the smearing of all defendants by all the proof regardless of relevancy or applicability. The Government was not required at any time to indicate against which of the defendants proof was being offered. The large number of defendants and co-conspirators, the length of the trial, the complexity of the issues and of the exhibits, nine defense lawyers, two prosecuting attorneys, a half dozen or more special governmental agents, all contributed to an atmosphere of confusion and tension, making a fair trial impossible.

At the conclusion of the Government's case the Trial Court commented to the jury as follows:

> "I will not let this case go to the jury in any such confused state, M. Lankenau, that is all there is to it; you line it up. The mere fact that twelve > defense attorneys sit here and not one of them can point out the failure of proof in this number of Counts, I think is a pretty good indication of the fact how obscure this proof has been" (T. 6875).

Comment?

Counts 2 and 50 of the indictment have their inception dates on March 18, 1955. It is to be noted that petitioner did not meet any of the defendants involved herein until sometime in September 1955, when he first met McCarthy. Obviously petitioner had nothing whatever to do with the matters which came into the case between March 18 and September of 1955. The filling-in of that gap in time, and the incidental and collateral evidence which it sucked into it, consumed almost half the time of the trial, and was loaded with highly prejudicial evidence, more frequently than not irrelevant to the issues.

Petitioner was for some years prior to September, 1955, Vice-President of the Prudential Federal Savings and Loan Association in Salt Lake City, Utah. Before occupying that position he was Executive Vice-President of the Brownsville Federal Savings and Loan Association in Brownsville, Texas (J. 1103a-1104a, J. 1617a).

Petitioner came to New York City in September, 1955 with the intention of entering the mortgage brokerage business. He was accompanied by defendant Meredith, whose acquaintance he had made in 1954 in Utah where Meredith was employed by a mortgage company which did business with petitioner's savings and loan association (J. 1618a).

Petitioner learned after several meetings with New York acquaintances that the mortgage brokerage business was depressed at that time as a result of Government action with regard to financing mortgages of veterans, and he found no opportunities in that field (J. 1618a-1619a).

Soon after petitioner learned of this situation, and about September 20, 1955, William J. McCarthy proposed to him that he join with him and defendant Crosby and invest some money in the acquisition of the controlling stock of Texas-Adams Oil Company, Inc. and he agreed to do so (J. 1619a-1620a).

Following the acquisition of Texas-Adams on September 27, 1955, petitioner was elected Vice-President and Chairman of the Board and he continued as such until about March 15, 1956, when he terminated his association with the venture (J. 1152a-1154a).

Although he held those two titles for approximately six months, the record discloses that he exercised no real authority in the affairs of the company and such official duties as he performed were largely ministerial and routine.

Petitioner's connection with the Texas-Adams acquisition by McCarthy and associates began only a very few days before the closing on September 27, 1955 as a result of McCarthy's suggestion that he join the enterprise and put some money into it (J. 1618a-1620a).

As a result of the conversation with McCarthy and the proposal which he made, petitioner, on or about September 26, 1955, requested his bank in Salt Lake City, Utah, to wire $4,000 to the Chemical Bank in New York for his use, and that was done on September 26, 1955. $3,700 of these funds were used on September 27 to accomplish the closing of the Texas-Adams acquisition (J. 241a-242a, J. 253a).

It is conclusively established in this record that petitioner took no part in the negotiations between Philip Gordon and Company and McCarthy and Crosby, which preceded the September 27th closing (J. 266a).

Likewise, and this is a fact of vital importance to petitioner, he took no part in the negotiations, at any time, between McCarthy and Crosby and the moneylender, Spiotta, which led to the loan of $40,300 by Spiotta. All of Spiotta's discussions and negotiations with regard to Texas-Adams were with McCarthy and Crosby (J. 182a, J. 183a, J. 184a-185a, J. 188a). Spiotta testified at one point, "I say now under oath that I did business only with Mr. Crosby" (J. 209a).

Although petitioner was physically present at the September 27th closing, it is abundantly clear that he took no real part in anything that was being done there, except to contribute $3,700 to the purchase price of the Texas-Adams stock. Several of the Government's witnesses vaguely recalled that petitioner was at the closing, although taking no active part in what was being done, and others either had no recollection of his presence or were unable to identify him (J. 179a, 246a, 258a, 251a-252a, 258a).

During the period from September 27th to November 7, 1955, William J. McCarthy, with the assistance of appellant Crosby, dominated and directed the affairs of Texas-Adams. On or about November 7, 1955 Crosby resigned as an officer and director of Texas-Adams as the result of a disagreement with McCarthy, and thereafter McCarthy and Thomas K. Hudson, a Denver lawyer and director of Texas-Adams, ran the company and made all of the significant decisions as to its affairs.

The record discloses that following the September 27th acquisition, McCarthy was living at the St. Moritz Hotel in New York and in the weeks immediately thereafter he conducted many of the affairs of Texas-Adams from his suite there. Up to the date of his resignation from the company on November 7, 1955, Crosby lived at the Shoreham Hotel on West 55th Street, New York, and maintained a combined apartment and office there, where he functioned as the Secretary-Treasurer of Texas-Adams. Crosby kept the Texas-Adams files there until November 7th and employed a secretary, one Lynne Crane, who was a Government witness in this case. It was Miss Crane's testimony that during this period she was the only Texas-Adams employee, that petitioner was never at this office in the Shoreham Hotel, and that he never gave her any directions or dictation (J. 874a-875a, J. 879a-880a).

In summary, petitioner, for years a responsible official of savings and loan associations in Texas and in Utah, joined the Texas-Adams venture in September, 1955 at the behest of an acquaintance of many years, William J. McCarthy.

During the succeeding three or four months he participated to a limited extent in legitimate business negotiations in connection with three or four contemplated Texas-Adams acquisitions. McCarthy made all the decisions in these negotiations.

No Government witness testified that petitioner made any false representations to him or defrauded him in any manner. The proof indicates that petitioner drew a salary of $1,000 per month from Texas-Adams for perhaps three or four months beginning in November, 1955. There was no showing by the Government that he reaped any profits from the venture. In fact, Texas-Adams owed him money at the time he terminated his association with it. When he lost confidence in what McCarthy was doing in Texas-Adams, petitioner severed his connection with it about March 15, 1956. In a very real sense, petitioner is perhaps the most aggrieved victim of McCarthy's folly.

After three days of trial defendant McCarthy pleaded guilty in the absence of the jury. The circumstances surrounding this matter is a subject of a question before this Court.

During the course of the trial, the Government under a false claim of surprise was permitted to cross-examine its own witness, and by such improper means adduce indirectly and improperly damaging hearsay evidence of Government agents who were not called to the stand, and could not be subjected to cross-examination with respect to the alleged material contained in the reports from which the prosecutor was reading. This related to the so-called Greenberg episode which, by the way, came into the case solely because of the presence therein of the aforementioned broker-defendants.

During the course of the trial, the Government offered evidence which was received of independent crimes unrelated to the charges contained in the indictment. All this evidence was objected to, and the objections overruled.

During the course of the trial the defense was foreclosed from obtaining statement of witnesses made to the prosecutors before the trial on completely untenable grounds. Indeed, the evidence is clear that though the prosecutors knew of this Court's ruling in the Jencks cases, they deliberately destroyed some of the aforementioned statements and deliberately made deletions and interpolations in others so as to avoid production as non verbatim statements of the witnesses.

Particularly damaging to petitioner was the receipt in evidence over objection of a letter concerning transactions between defendant Crosby and one George Jannis without appropriate instructions to the jury specifically that it was not competent evidence against petitioner. The episode requires some further discussion.

There is no evidence in this record that petitioner had anything to do, either directly or indirectly, with any transactions between Crosby and Jannis or that he was ever aware that they were going on or even heard of them prior to the trial of this case.

Nevertheless, the Trial Court, by admitting incompetent evidence and by misconstruing and misstating what the evidence showed with respect to the Crosby-Jannis transactions in its charge to the jury, connected petitioner directly to these transactions without any legal evidence in this record to justify such action. This was, as we shall demonstrate, highly prejudicial error.

The prosecutor, in his opening statement to the jury, named the defendants whom he contended were involved in the Jannis transactions. He made no claim that petitioner was in any way connected with them. Jannis, testifying as a Government witness, gave no testimony pertaining to petitioner or connecting him in any way with the transactions which Jannis had with the appellant Crosby.

After the Court overruled defense objections to the admissibility of the Crosby letter (gov. exh. 60A), the prosecutor requested a conference at the bench, which the Court granted, and he addressed the Court as follows:

> "Your Honor, I ask permission to reserve my right to read this to the jury until the case is drawing to a close, at which time other admissions may be introduced by the Government, and at that time I would ask your Honor, considering all the evidence in the case to make appropriate instructions concerning the effect an instrument such as this and other instruments might have as far as the defendants on whom they are binding" (J. 674a-674aa).

Since the transactions between Jannis and Crosby were now being placed before the jury, counsel for Crosby took the position that all the evidence on the transactions should be introduced in the orderly fashion of presenting it at one time and when the jury could make sense of it. He felt, furthermore, that to allow the Government to withhold the contents of the letter from the jury and to be permitted to read it to the jury later in the case would, in effect, be giving the Government some sort of summation during the course of the trial. The Court, of course, agreed. While the suggested procedure of the prosecutor was not sound and was a trifle bizarre, he did make one valid point during the course of his argument for his procedure: this letter of Crosby was only admissible at the time against Crosby and it would never be admissible against anyone else later, because he could not connect it to any other defendants. The prosecutor's view is on the record:

> "Mr. Lankenau: Your Honor, I cannot make the representation of connection beyond the connection to Mr. Crosby, and that is the reason I thought and meant to make it clear that I considered this by way of an admission of Crosby and not an admission by other defendants. For that reason I suggested to your Honor the procedure I did because I want to be fair to the other defendants whose names are mentioned in the instrument" (J. 674aa-674ab).

But the Court did not recognize the prosecutor's conceded inability to connect the letter to petitioner or anybody except Crosby. The Court went on to tell the jury that at the end of the case it might be able to use the letter against petitioner and other defendants if they found that a conspiracy existed! Here is the Court's instruction to the jury following his ruling on the admissibility of the Crosby letter:

> (The following proceedings took place within the hearing of the jury:)
>
> "The Court: Ladies and gentlemen:
>
> This exhibit 60-A which has just been identified as having been signed by Peter Crosby is being received in evidence at this time only as against the defendant Crosby.
>
> There are other defendants mentioned in that exhibit, but at this time I direct you to disregard it as to those other defendants. Later on if they are proved to be connected with the conspiracy in such a way that the acts of one bind all who are members of it, then you can consider it as evidence against not only those that are mentioned but anyone else who has been proved to have been in the conspiracy (J. 674ab).
>
> • • • • •
>
> The Court: Go ahead, Mr. Lankenau" (J. 674ac).

The Assistant United States Attorney then read Exhibit 60A to the jury.

Does anyone now take seriously the alleged effectiveness of instructions to a jury in conspiracy cases?

To save the time of the Court, and the expense of a lengthy petition and brief, petitioner respectfully requests this Court to read the petitions of petitioners Mittelman and Meredith submitted herewith as though presented by him for consideration, and incorporates herein all applicable material.

Petitioner trusts that this Honorable Court will excuse this imposition upon it. It has perhaps not gone unnoticed that the trial was lengthy and the proceedings extremely costly.

Reasons for Granting the Writ

1. In sustaining the trial Court with respect to the plea of guilty of defendant William J. McCarthy on the third day of a 4 months trial, and its failure to grant a mistrial, and its further failure to hold a post verdict hearing with respect to jury misconduct in reading newspaper reports about the plea and discussing it, despite instructions not to read newspapers, listen to the radio and not to discuss the case, the court below decided the matter in conflict with prior decisions of this Court, particularly, Marshall v. U. S., 360 U. S. 310 (1959).

2. In sustaining the trial Court with respect to the admission of evidence of unrelated crimes, the Court below decided a matter in conflict with the rule approved by this Court in the U. S. v. Kralewitch, 145 F. 2d 76.

The Court below decided an important question of criminal law in conflict with the decision of this Court in Kotteakos v. U. S., 328 U. S. 750 (1946).

4. In reversing the conviction of the three broker defendants and acquitting them, the Court below failed to order a new trial despite the fact that the record clearly indicated that prejudicial evidence was received against all the defendants, which would have been inadmissible but for the fact that the broker-defendants were named as co-conspirators. We believe that this case bears resemblance to Schaffer v. U. S., 266 F. 2d 435; 362 U. S. 511, recently decided by this Court. We believe it to be a matter of first instance of great importance which ought to be decided by this Court. And we believe that if the rationale of the Schaffer decisions in this Court and in the Court below are applied, this Court will order a new trial for the petitioning defendants.

Taken all together, we submit that the matters mentioned above justify the granting of a new trial.

CONCLUSION

It is respectfully submitted that this Court should issue the writ prayed for.

Respectfully submitted,

FREDERICK W. SCHOLEM
Attorney for Petitioner.

Office-Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
DEC
JO

Supreme Court of the United States

October Term, 1961

No. ...589

EUGENE MEREDITH,

Petitioner.

AGAINST

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SECOND CIRCUIT

FREDERICK W. SCHOLOM,
Attorney for Petitioner.

LODER APPEAL PRESS, INC., 41 VESEY STREET, NEW YORK, N. Y. WOrth 2-0689

INDEX

	PAGE
The Opinion Below	2
The Grounds of Jurisdiction	2
Statutes Involved	2
Questions Presented for Review	2
Statement of the Case	3
Reasons for Allowing the Writ	17
Conclusion	18

Cases Cited

Bollenbach v. United States, 325 U. S. 607	15
Boyd v. United States, 142 U. S. 450	9
Delli Paoli v. United States, 352 U. S. 232	15
Grunewald v. United States, 353 U. S. 391, 404	14
Harper v. United States, 239 F. 2d 945	9
Kotteakos v. United States, 328 U. S. 750	9, 12
Michelson v. United States, 335 U. S. 469	9
Moore v. United States, 142 U. S. 450	13

PAGE

Schaffer v. United States, 266 F. 2d 435 15

Schaffer v. United States, 362 U. S. 511 15

United States v. Krulewitch, 145 F. 2d 76 ..... 13, 15

United States v. Peoni, 100 F. 2d 401 12

Statutes Cited

Title 18, U. S. C.:

Sections 1341-2 1

Section 371 1

Title 15, U. S. C.:

Section 77e(a)(1)(2) 1

Section 77x 1

Authority Cited

1 Wigmore on Evidence, Sections 29-A, 42, 55, 1904 13

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1961

No. .....

EUGENE MEREDITH,

Petitioner,

AGAINST

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SECOND CIRCUIT

To the Chief Justice of the United States and the Associate Justices of the United States Supreme Court.

Petitioner[1] respectfully asks this Court to issue a writ of certiorari to review the final judgment of the Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit which affirmed petitioner's conviction under Title 18, United States Code, Sections 1341 and 2; Title 15, United States Code, Sections 77e (a) (1), (a) (2) and 77x; and Title 18, United States Code, Section 371.

[1] Three defendants are petitioning this Court in this case for writs of certiorari. There is no community of interest between them, and yet their interests are not to be regarded as conflict. They have joined together to pay certain printing expenses common to all of them. They respectfully request this Court to consider the arguments and presentation of each as though made by all wherever and whenever applicable.

The Opinion Below

The Opinion of the Court of Appeals is reported at 274 F. 2d 928. A copy is annexed to the petition of Leo B. Mittelman for a similar writ submitted simultaneously herewith, and we respectfully refer this Court to his petition.

The Grounds of Jurisdiction

The grounds are the same as appear in Petitioner Mittelman's application to which this Court is respectfully referred.

Statutes Involved

The statutes involved are set forth in the petition of Leo B. Mittelman to which this Court is respectfully referred.

Questions Presented for Review

1. Whether the mail fraud counts and the conspiracy count should not have been dismissed because of duplicity and repugnancy.

2. Whether petitioner was not deprived of his rights under Article 6 of the Constitution of the United States because the indictment was vague, uncertain and violated the rules of pleading in the Federal Court.

3. Whether a conspiracy accusation is fair when a score of alleged co-conspirators are joined for the prejudicial purposes of the prosecution; where co-conspirators are held under subpoena and then not used at the trial; and, where persons are joined in the conspiracy who obviously have no connection therewith with resultant prejudice.

4. Whether, in view of the Government's presentation of the case as a single over-all conspiracy, there was not a fatal variance.

5. Whether petitioner had a fair trial where the trial judge displayed obvious bias against petitioner and his counsel, and usurped the role of the prosecutor.

6. Whether the Court below erred in sustaining the trial court's ruling refusing the defense the opportunity to see the prosecutor's note of interviews with witnesses on grounds violative of the rationale of the Jencks cases.

7. Whether, after reversing the conviction of the three broker defendants and acquitting them of the conspiracy charge, the Court below should not have ordered a new trial for petitioners because of prejudicial evidence which came in solely because of the presence of the broker defendants in the case as co-conspirators.

8. Whether the Court erred in the matter of the McCarthy guilty plea.

9. Whether under all the circumstances of the case, petitioner had a fair trial.

Statement of the Case

The indictment is in 50 counts, embracing four categories of crimes. Count 1 is an inter-state wire fraud count.

Counts 2-32 allege a scheme to defraud by use of the mails.

Counts 33-49 allege the use of the mails to sell unregistered Texas-Adams stock.

Count 50 charges a conspiracy to use the mails to sell unregistered Texas-Adams stock.

The allegations of the various counts are more fully described in the Mittelman petition to which this Court is respectfully referred.

Petitioner Meredith is not named in Count 1.

Judgment of conviction was rendered against Petitioner Meredith on June 11, 1960 based on a jury verdict adjudging him guilty on 44 counts of an indictment charging him with mail fraud, substantive violations of the Securities Act, and conspiracy to violate the Securities Act.

Petitioner was sentenced to 5 years imprisonment on one mail fraud count, one securities act count, and the conspiracy count to run concurrently with each other (counts 2, 34 and 50). He was also sentenced to 5 years imprisonment on the duplicative mail fraud and securities act violations counts to run concurrently with each other but consecutively to sentences imposed on counts 2, 34 and 50; execution of sentence suspended and petitioner placed on probation for 5 years to commence upon termination of the prison sentence on counts 2, 34 and 50.

Defendant McCarthy pleaded guilty on the third day of the trial which commenced on February 15th, 1960 and was submitted to the jury more than three months later, to wit: May 23rd, 1960. The transcript covers more than 9,000 pages. Exhibits were countless and complicated.

The guilty plea of McCarthy, its circumstances and prejudicial effect will be discussed later. The complexity of the trial also bears on the issues raised by petitioner.

Petitioner took the stand in his own behalf and testified that he was 42 years old; had had two years of college training; was first in the Coast Guard, shortly after Pearl Harbor; was injured and discharged; became thereafter a Second Lieutenant in the Air Corps Auxilliary on rescue service; and at the time of his discharge was a First Lieutenant.

Petitioner accompanied defendant Pettit to New York in September, 1959. Pettit wanted to go into the mortgage brokerage business in New York. Petitioner had had experience in that business in California, and, he had known Pettit for several years.

In New York they met defendant McCarthy quite by chance. Pettit and McCarthy had known each other from boyhood days. After the usual small talk McCarthy referred to his anticipated take-over of control of Texas-Adams, and invited Pettit into the venture. The mortgage brokerage business did not look promising at that time in New York City, and Pettit expressed interest in McCarthy's proposal, and decided to throw in his lot with McCarthy after some consultation with petitioner who was much struck with the possibilities involved in an association with the fabulous Texas McCarthy oil family. When Pettit agreed to join McCarthy he received assurance that petitioner would be given a job. When the take-over was accomplished, in which petitioner played no part whatever, he was employed as office manager of the Texas-Adams office in New York, and, because the principals were busy all over the country in wheeling and dealing, he was made an officer and director of the company in order to sign official documents, checks and so forth.

This position and the role assumed by petitioner required him to perform continually and constantly all kinds of routine tasks assigned to him by management. In January of 1956 he was put in charge of the Denver office under the direct supervision of Thomas K. Hudson, Esq., an officer, director and general counsel for the company.

The Court below said: "While the heavy weight of the evidence would seem to indicate that (he) Meredith was a 'follower' rather than a 'leader', this is a far cry from raising a doubt as to lack of criminal knowledge."

This "follower" received consecutive sentences of 5 years under various counts.

Petitioner does not and did not deny that he was extremely active in the affairs of Texas-Adams. His duties required him to be more active probably than anyone else in the matter of signing papers, running errands, signing checks and tending generally to the company's business. But this, too, is a far cry from proof of intent to commit crimes. Petitioner contends that the errors in the case were so many, so flagrant, and so prejudicial that a new trial should be ordered in the interests of justice.

When the Court below acquitted the three broker defendants, it said with respect to certain evidence, otherwise most damaging, that the evidence was "comprised by the fact that Gordon and Co. (owned and controlled by the three broker defendants) bought or sold none of the Empire stock in question and received none of the bonus shares" (p. 2794). In short, the Court below held that since the broker defendants, and their company were not shown to have profited from the transactions and actions attributed to them by a Government witness, it was not fair to give credence to the testimony of that witness.

It is respectfully submitted that if the same reasoning had been applied to petitioner's activities, he, too, should have been let out by the Court below because the Government failed to prove that he had profited from the frauds attributed to him only by reason of his association with the principals—McCarthy, Crosby and Pettit.

The Court below accepted the Government's theory of a so-called "integrated scheme." It said (p. 2711): "The Government argues correctly that the evidence establishes, basically, a central plan to effect the issuance and sale of worthless or grossly overpriced unregistered corporate securities to an uninformed and deluded investing public."

The proof of the Count 1 scheme covers almost one-third of this gigantic record (J. 157a-286a; 286a-308a; 836a-8a; 851a-4a, 1337a-40a, 1352a-3a and numerous exhibits). Twelve witnesses were called to testify about the manner of its connivance and consummation. During all this time petitioner had to sit by and listen, as did the jury, to the unfolding tale with which petitioner had no connection whatever, and which was pregnant with criminality and prejudice as to him!

The vice of the Government's procedure went further. The indictment alleged that the Count 2 scheme had its origination on March the 18th, 1955. At best Crosby heard of Texas-Adams early in August of 1955 and McCarthy thereafter heard it from Crosby. The gap between March 18th, 1955 and August had to be filled in. And the Government filled it in with all manner of refuse, garbage and dirt. And it is obvious that none of this, quite apart from relevancy or lack of relevancy, could have had anything to do with petitioner or the Count 2 scheme.

We are referring now to the so-called Homestead-Ajax evidence, the events of which preceded in time McCarthy's involvement with Crosby in the Texas-Adams fraudulent take-over.

This evidence was irrelevant, or if even superficially relevant it should have been excluded because of its overwhelming prejudicial effect.

Petitioner, obviously, had nothing whatever to do with these transactions. He had never heard of any of the people involved. He could not possibly have known of these complicated dealings which on their face seem legal enough. What the jury may have thought is another matter.

At least half or more of the trial was taken up with matters with which petitioner had no concern or connection. But he did know or come to know many of the defendants involved and connected with the company. It was inevitable that if the jury thought any of them guilty, then petitioner must also have been guilty because by reason of his duties he was inextricably associated with them.

Passing for the moment any discussion of the possible permissible evidence which the Government may have properly adduced for submission to the jury, it is our contention that the Trial Court gave to the Government unjustifiable and prejudicial latitude in the matter of evidence confusing and collateral and irrelevant, and evidence down-right inadmissible on any possible theory, and extremely prejudicial to petitioner.

Petitioner will in a moment bring to the attention of this Court the nature of such prejudicial testimony. It came in over objection, and was received "subject to connection." There was of course, in several instances the usual and meaningless admonitions to the jury concerning personal guilt, and the usual lip service to the amenities of trial procedure.

The categories of objectionable and prejudicial evidence may be summarized as follows:

1. All the evidence that came in under Count 1.
2. All the evidence relating to the so-called Homestead-Ajax transaction.
3. All the evidence of disparate crimes committed by some of the defendants but which had no relation to the allegations of the indictment.
4. All the evidence relating to the broker defendants who were named as co-defendants, were found guilty by the jury, and, thereafter, acquitted by the Court below for insufficiency of evidence.

It is fundamental that the commission by different defendants of distinct and separate offenses, not arising out of the same transaction, cannot be made the subject of a common trial. Michelson v. United States, 335 U. S. 469; Boyd v. United States, 142 U. S. 450; Harper v. United States, 239 F. 2d 945.

In Kotteakos v. United States, 328 U. S. 750, this Court said:

> "Here toleration went too far. We do not think that either Congress, when it enacted paragraph 269, or this Court, when deciding the Berger case, intended to authorize the Government to string together, for common trial, eight or more > separate and distinct crimes, conspiracies related in kind though they might be, when the only nexus among them lies in the fact that one man participated in all. * * * The dangers of transference of guilt from one to another across the line separating conspiracies, subconsciously or otherwise, are so great that no one really can say prejudice to substantial right has not taken place."

The principle is peculiarly applicable here. The Government used a dragnet. It threw in everything it could find. It compounded a stinking stew, a veritable witches brew. It named as defendants and conspirators anybody and everybody who had any tangential connection with the transaction. It dragooned every apparently unsavory transaction. All under one umbrella, possible only under the vicious callous reckless shroud of alleged conspiracy.

Petitioner contends that all the evidence which came in under Count 1 should have been excluded because it was not relevant to the central issue raised by the Government's theory of the case. It was a crime in itself.

The same may be said of all the so-called Homestead evidence: all that evidence which had nothing whatever to do with the alleged grand scheme suggested by the Government; or, if it may be said to have had some relevance, the relevance was too remote to justify its admission in evidence. Its sheer weight prejudiced the case against the other defendants.

It is in order to give some further examples of prejudicial collateral evidence. This will be done under the nomenclature used below:

1) "The Worth Investment Deal": In this instance defendants McCarthy, Pettit and co-conspirator Hudson formed a company for a private venture, and diverted $50,000. from the treasury of Texas-Adams for that purpose. The transaction was entirely outside the scope of the alleged conspiracy, and by its very nature precluded knowledge, participation or adoption by the other alleged conspirators.

2) The Lazy Jay Deal: In this transaction McCarthy sold to a co-conspirator, Larry Rosen, a parcel of property owned by Texas-Adams, known as "Lazy Jay". Rosen bought the property by secret arrangement with McCarthy pursuant to a pre-arranged sale in Canada for a substantially higher price. He divided the swag with McCarthy (J. 1350a et seq.). Here, again, is a transaction having no relevancy to the alleged conspiracy. It was a strictly private, secret off-the-record deal in which none of the other alleged co-conspirators was involved, and was clearly not in furtherance of the alleged conspiracy (J. 1348a et seq.).

3) The Lester Kent Transaction: This involved a sale of stock by Crosby for cash (J. 1070a-71a) to a customer of Mr. Kent. Incident, however, to this transaction was a lurid account of a proposal by Crosby of highly prejudicial nature (R. 4236-4238).

4) Crosby made many deals with brokers to sell stock under his control, in the United States and Canada. This he did on his own, and for his own personal profit—except when he shared with McCarthy. These deals were made with his close friends of many years Herbert Mann of Foster-Mann, and Harrison Miller of Thompson McKinnon & Company. The deals were secret; the brokerage accounts were for Crosby in the name of Jannis, and the brokers knew it. They assisted Crosby in his schemes to steal, suffered no ill themselves, but profited in commissions and fees.

5) The record is replete with private sales by McCarthy and Crosby of Texas Adams stock for personal profit. These dereliections weighed heavily on the other defendants who were completely unconnected with them. Taken "subject to connection" which was never established, the other defendants had to bear the burden of transference of guilt by alleged conspiratorial association.

These examples do not exhaust the list.

The trial judge seems to have taken it for granted that anything done by a conspirator regardless of its relation to the conspiracy was chargeable against the alleged co-conspirators. This is, of course, not the law.

It was Judge Hand who said in United States v. Peoni, 100 F. 2d 401, 403 (C. C. A. 2d, 1938):

> "At times it seems to be supposed that, once some kind of criminal concert is established, all parties are liable for everything anyone of the original participants does, and even for what those do who join later. Nothing could be more untrue. Nobody is liable in conspiracy except for the fair import of the concerted purpose or agreement as he understands it; if later comers change that, he is not liable for the change; his liability is limited to the common purposes while he remains in it. The confusion is perhaps due to the fact that everything done by the conspirators including the declarations of later entrants is competent evidence against all, so far as it may fairly be thought to be in execution of the concert to which the accused is privy, though that doctrine too is often abused."

Kotteakos is a striking case historically. But it is merely a special instance of a well grounded rule that prejudicial collateral matter may not be introduced into a case, though possibly relevant, if the overall result is to prejudice a defendant's substantial rights. Error thus committed opens the record, and places the burden on the government to show "harmlessness".

The trial judge extended to the limit the Government's use of all the tricks and devices which have brought mass conspiracy trials under condemnation. Because of the extreme latitude improperly and unfairly extended to the Government, appellant's substantial rights were prejudiced.

Even if the evidence be deemed relevant to any issue properly raised by Counts 2 and 50, it should have been excluded nevertheless because its prejudicial nature outweighed its remote and tangential relevance. United States v. Krulewitch, 145 F. 2d 76 at 80 (C. A. 2, 1944).

See also Moore v. United States, 150 U. S. 57, 60-61 (1893); Boyd v. United States, 142 U. S. 450 (1892); 1 Wigmore on Evidence 29 A. 42, 55, 1904.

Is there to be no restriction or limitation upon the privilege of the prosecution to take the greatest diversity and multiplicity of conspiracies and crimes, arbitrarily designate them as a single conspiracy, and depend upon this Court's decision in the Bayer case for sanction and absolution? Clearly a point is reached where a jury is first impressed and finally overwhelmed by the very bulk of the inculpatory evidence against a seemingly endless succession of co-defendants. The reasonable doubt that the jury might have entertained of the guilt of a particular individual can hardly be expected to withstand the ever incoming tide of incriminating testimony against the host of defendants, particularly when the jury is admonished that the acts of each defendant is bound by the acts and declarations of all. Under said circumstances, can it reasonably be expected that a jury will properly allocate the proof? The answer must be in the negative.

No one can tell what item of evidence ultimately moved a jury to reach a certain conclusion. On the other hand, and far outweighing all of the foregoing reasons for permitting this basically improper procedure, is the effect of the rule on accused persons. An impecunious defendant charged in such a gigantic conspiracy, usually finds himself unable to retain experienced counsel, because it becomes obvious, from a mere examination of the indictment, that the trial of the issues will take a long time. Secondly, in the event of a conviction, appeals to the Circuit Court of Appeals become almost impossible, because many persons, unable to take a pauper's oath, are nevertheless put into the position where it is impossible for them to perfect the record and present the questions to the Circuit Court.

The basic issue presented by this case concerns the proper limitation upon the use of a conspiracy charge to deprive persons accused of crime of their fundamental right to be free of mass trial. This does not relate merely to naming numberless persons as defendants, but countless others as co-conspirators who have no relation whatever to the central conspiracy, but who are brought into the case for prejudicial effect and prejudicial purpose. The government should not have the windfall of prejudicial and inadmissible testimony against each defendant because of a charge of conspiracy.

It hardly needs elaboration that this type of issue is one which this Court has itself recognized as worthy of certiorari on many occasions. In Grunewald v. United States, 353 U. S. 391, 404, Mr. Justice Harlan wrote: "Prior cases in this Court have repeatedly warned that we will view with disfavor attempts to broaden the already pervasive and wide-sweeping nets of conspiracy prosecutions. The important considerations of policy behind such warnings need not again be detailed." He cited, as illustrative cases, Delli Paoli v. United States, 352 U. S. 232; Lutwak v. United States, 344 U. S. 604; Krulewitch v. United States, 336 U. S. 440; and Bollenbach v. United States, 325 U. S. 607.

This case represents further drift in "the long evolution of that elastic, sprawling and pervasive offense" of conspiracy.

The Court below not only reversed the convictions of the Gordon group, the three so-called broker defendants, but it acquitted them without ordering a new trial for the other appellant. Standing as defendants and co-conspirators before the jury, much prejudicial evidence came in against them which affected the interests and rights of all the other defendants. A great deal of it would have been inadmissible but for the relaxed rules of evidence where conspiracy is involved. It is proper to speculate that the jury gave weight to this testimony because the jury found these defendants guilty, and the Government in the Court below argued strenuously that this evidence established their guilt. It is not proper, on the other hand, to speculate that the jury gave it no weight.

See the recent Schaffer decisions in this Court, and the Court below (266 F. 2d 435; 362 U. S. 511).

Substantial error was committed in the way the trial Court handled the McCarthy guilty plea, and its aftermath. The Court is respectfully referred to Mittelman's petition on that point.

The prosecutor's handling of Government witness Greenberg is also a source of genuine complaint because the cross-examination which the trial Court permitted the prosecutor, was based on a false claim of surprise.

Petitioner took the stand in his own defense, and immediately the Trial Court displayed its bias and made a fair trial for petitioner impossible. Fairness is merely a synonym for impartiality. And impartiality is the highest duty of a judge. The prejudicial consequence of impropriety by a trial judge hardly requires exposition. It destroys the protective shield of judicial impartiality, which ensures impersonal and equal treatment, courteous consideration of all arguments, dispassionate and objective rulings, fair comment on the evidence to the jury, and, in case of conviction, a just sentence. Before the jury, it directly diminishes the stature, dignity and integrity of counsel; and indirectly discredits his client.

Where, as here, the prejudicial unfairness is manifest, no other consideration can cure it and save the judgment of conviction from reversal. Nor can any other course defend and preserve the integrity of the judicial process.

We do not believe that a reading of this record will show that the trial judge measure up to the requirements of his office.

The direct testimony and cross-examination of petitioner will be found in the joint appendix at pages 1616-A through 1696-A.

It would lengthen this petition unduly to quote the record with respect to the improper conduct of the trial judge. He virtually took over the conduct of the cross-examination. There is scarcely a page which does not show his interposition into the case as the prosecution's arm of the Government. By gesture, tone of voice and emphasis he left no doubt in the jury's mind of his low opinion of petitioners and his exculpatory testimony. He made mountains out of molehills. He swung around in his creaking chair and turned his back on petitioner whenever petitioner scored a point. He ridiculed petitioner's counsel. The record must be read to be believed. If the Court will read the 40 pages between J. 1646-A and 1682-A, we are satisfied that we will have made our point.

This is not a case where a judge properly seeks to clarify answers. In this case the judge assumed the role of prosecutor, and foreclosed the possibility of a fair consideration of petitioner's evidence by the jury.

Reasons for Allowing the Writ

1. The failure to dismiss the indictment violated petitioner's constitutional rights under the 6th Amendment because it did not have the clarity and specificity required by the Amendment.

2. In sustaining the denial of the motion to dismiss the indictment prior to trial for the reasons given by the Court for duplicity and repugnancy, the Court below decided a question of criminal law in conflict with principles of law established by custom and right for the protection of the individual citizen.

3. The trial Court adopted a procedure which nullified this Court's ruling and instruction in the Jencks Act cases. It is necessary now in the light of the tactics employed by prosecutors, to review and lay down new "ground" rules in order to assure defendants in criminal cases opportunity to defend themselves.

4. This Court should decide as a matter of first instance whether a convicted defendant is entitled to a new trial: (a) where evidence against a co-conspirator is received subject to connection and the co-conspirator is subsequently acquitted by a higher court; (b) where but for the presence of the subsequently acquitted defendants, prejudicial evidence would have been inadmissible; and (c) where said evidence was in any event clearly prejudicial.

5. The Court below has decided important questions of Federal Criminal Law in conflict with principles set forth by this Court in Kotteakos v. United States, 328 U. S. 750 and United States v. Krulewitch, 145 F. 2d 76.

6. This Court should allow this writ because petitioner was denied a fair trial.

Taken all together, we submit, the matters aforementioned prevented petitioner from having had a fair trial.

CONCLUSION

It is respectfully submitted that this Court should issue the Writ prayed for.

Respectfully submitted,

FREDERICK W. SCHOLOM,
Attorney for Petitioner.

INDEX

	Page
Opinion below	2
Jurisdiction	2
Questions presented	2
Statement	3
A. The indictment	5
B. The scheme to defraud	5
1. Obtaining control of Texas-Adams by use of Texas-Adams funds	5
2. False reports to Texas-Adams stockholders	6
3. Issuance and sale of Texas-Adams stock for nonexistent services and purchases	8
4. Public sales of unregistered stock	9
C. Participation by petitioners	12
1. Worth Pettit, Jr.	12
2. Eugene Meredith	13
3. Leo B. Mittelman	13
Argument	15
1. The indictment	16
2. Alleged inconsistency of the verdict	17
3. The notes and witness sheets prepared by government attorneys	18
4. The court's charge to the jury on character evidence	19
5. The reversal as to three stockbrokers by the court of appeals	20
6. The plea of guilty by defendant McCarthy	20
7. Only single conspiracy was shown	22
8. Admission of evidence of the Worth Investment transaction	22

Argument—Continued Page

9. Cross-examination of Greenberg 22
10. Alleged bias of the trial judge 23

Conclusion 24

Cases:

Campbell v. United States, 365 U.S. 85 19
Dunn v. United States, 284 U.S. 390 18
Glasser v. United States, 315 U.S. 60 15
Holt v. United States, 218 U.S. 245 21
Kotteakos v. United States, 328 U.S. 750 22
Marshall v. United States, 360 U.S. 310 21
Michelson v. United States, 335 U.S. 469 19
Palermo v. United States, 360 U.S. 343 19
Securities and Exchange Commission v. Ralston Purina Co., 346 U.S. 119 17
Schaffer v. United States, 362 U.S. 511 20
United States v. Falcone, 109 F. 2d 579, affirmed, 311 U.S. 205 21

Statutes and rules:

Securities Act of 1933, Sec. 4(1), 15 U.S.C. 77d 17
15 U.S.C. 77e(a)(1) 3
15 U.S.C. 77e(a)(2) 3
15 U.S.C. 77x 3
18 U.S.C. 371 3
18 U.S.C. 1341 3
18 U.S.C. 1343 3
18 U.S.C. 3500 ..... 3, 18, 19
F. R. Crim. P., Rule 7(c) 16
F. R. Crim. P., Rule 30 20

In the Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1961

No. 587

LEO R. MITTELMAN, PETITIONER

v.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

No. 588

WORTH PETTIT, JR., PETITIONER

v.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

No. 589

EUGENE MEREDITH, PETITIONER

v.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

ON PETITIONS FOR WRITS OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SECOND CIRCUIT

BRIEF FOR THE UNITED STATES IN OPPOSITION

OPINION BELOW

The opinion of the court of appeals (Pet. No. 587, following p. 64, pp. 2681-2727; VII R. 1-47)[1] is reported at 294 F. 2d 928.

JURISDICTION

The judgment of the court of appeals was entered on August 22, 1961 (Pet. No. 587, pp. 68-69). Petitions for rehearing were denied on November 6, 1961 (Pet. No. 587, pp. 66-67). The petitions for writs of certiorari were filed on December 6, 1961. The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U.S.C. 1254(1).

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. Whether the incorporation by reference of most of Count 1 into Count 2 rendered the indictment vague or duplicitous.

2. Whether a conviction and acquittal on different counts of a mail fraud indictment involving similar mailings are so inconsistent as to require a new trial.

3. Whether the notes and resulting witness sheets prepared by government attorneys from interviews of witnesses in preparation for the trial, which were neither verbatim nor adopted by the witnesses, were

---

[1] Petitioners have filed a record in seven volumes. Volume I was the appendix for defendants Goldberg and Reicher prepared for the court of appeals; it will be designated "I R." Volumes II through V were the joint appendices filed by the government and certain defendants in the court of appeals and will be designated by volume number. Volume VI was the government appendix of exhibits as filed in the court of appeals and will be designated "VI R." Volume VII is in two parts, consecutively numbered, and contains the proceedings in the court of appeals.

subject to inspection by the accused under 18 U.S.C. 3500.

4. Whether the instruction to the jury on character evidence was proper.

5. Whether the reversal of the conviction of conspiracy as to some defendants, for lack of sufficient evidence of criminal intent, required a new trial for the remaining convicted conspirators.

6. Whether the plea of guilty by one defendant during trial, but not before the jury, required a mistrial or a new trial because of newspaper publicity.

7. Whether the evidence showed multiple conspiracies or a single conspiracy.

8. Whether it was unduly prejudicial to petitioners Meredith and Mittelman to admit evidence of an unlawful use of Texas-Adams funds by Pettit alone.

9. Whether the government was properly permitted to cross-examine a hostile government witness.

10. Whether the trial judge showed partiality against the petitioners.

STATEMENT

Petitioners, plus seven individuals and two companies, were indicted in the Southern District of New York on various offenses arising out of a scheme to defraud the stockholders of Texas-Adams Oil Company, Inc. (II R. 1, 36-95). Count I charged a fraud by wire in violation of 18 U.S.C. 1343 (II R. 36-39). Counts 2 through 32 charged mail fraud in violation of 18 U.S.C. 1341 (II R. 39-72). Counts 33 through 49 charged violations of the registration provisions applicable to the Texas-Adams stock, under 15 U.S.C. 77e(a)(1), 77e(a)(2) and 77x (II R. 73-87). Count 50 charged a conspiracy under 18 U.S.C. 371 (II R.

87-95). Not all defendants were charged in all counts (II R. 1).

In a jury trial two defendants were acquitted; petitioner Meredith was convicted on all counts submitted as to him; and petitioners Mittelman and Pettit were acquitted on some counts and convicted on others (II R. 25). The conviction of three defendants and their brokerage company, acting as brokers as distinguished from principals, was reversed by the court of appeals after review of the record on the ground that there was insufficient proof to go to the jury on wilfulness and criminal intent (VII R. 19).

Petitioner Meredith, who was convicted on 36 counts, was sentenced to 5 years' imprisonment; a second 5 year consecutive sentence was suspended, and he was placed on 5 years' probation to commence at the end of the prison sentence (II R. 27-28). Petitioner Mittelman, convicted on two counts, was sentenced to 5 years' imprisonment; a second 5 year consecutive sentence was suspended, and he was placed on probation for 5 years (II R. 30). Petitioner Pettit, convicted on 24 counts, was sentenced to imprisonment for 3 years; a second 3 year consecutive sentence was suspended, and he was placed on probation for 3 years to begin at the end of the prison sentence (II R. 29-30).[2]

---

[2] Defendant McCarthy, who pleaded guilty (infra), was sentenced to 3½ years' imprisonment, a $10,000 fine, and 3½ years probation (II R. 26-27). Defendant Crosby was sentenced to 5 years' imprisonment and probation for 5 years (II R. 28-29). Defendant Texas-Adams Oil Company, Inc., was fined $1.00 which was remitted (II R. 32).

There is little disagreement as to the basic facts as distinguished from their interpretation and relevance. The pertinent facts may be summarized as follows:

A. The Indictment

The indictment charged a scheme to defraud the stockholders of a corporation by gaining control, in part by use of the corporation's own funds; then increasing the authorized shares and issuing these to pay for nonexistent services and to purchase property of little or no value; freely selling these shares while illegally representing the shares as exempt from registration under S.E.C. regulations; and falsely representing the growth and value of the corporation. The execution of this scheme involved a conspiracy, the use of an interstate wire, and the use of the mail to deliver false reports and to sell unregistered stock unlawfully (II R. 36-95).

B. The Scheme to Defraud

1. Obtaining Control of Texas-Adams by Use of Texas-Adams Funds

As the result of an advertisement seeking control of a company which had issued stock to the public, Texas-Adams agreed to sell 283,000 of its shares for $105,000 to a group including defendants McCarthy and Crosby and petitioner Pettit. The down payment was to be $45,000 in exchange for 60,000 shares on September 27, 1955, with the remaining shares to be held in escrow pending future installment payments (II R. 261-269, IV R. 1337, 1352). Of the cash needed to purchase control, $40,300 came from a Mr. Spiotta, but only after $42,000 had been placed in his account in New Jersey (II R. 182-186). Arrangements for this $42,000 were made the day before by opening in a New Jersey bank three accounts in the names of Texas-Adams, Sundown Oil Company, and the American Montana Oil & Gas Corporation, and preparing transfers so that when $51,700 was transferred to the Texas-Adams account, $42,000 would end up in Mr. Spiotta's account after passing through the other companies (II R. 212-227). The $51,700 was transferred from the New York Texas-Adams account (II R. 243-252, 290). The remaining funds needed to gain control—$4,700—were supplied by petitioner Pettit, who was subsequently reimbursed (II R. 237-242, 294). The complicated disbursement had been previously outlined in an Agenda, Govt. Ex. 18-A (VI R. 6-9).

2. False Reports to Texas-Adams Stockholders

(a) Ajax Oil Company Properties

On November 25, 1955, Texas-Adams reported to its stockholders that a contract to purchase certain oil and gas leases from Ajax Oil Company was signed "and may be considered closed pending clearance of titles and abstracts to the properties" (VI R. 10). The actual facts were these. Ajax Oil had offered in July 1955 to sell the leases for $1,250,000 to defendant McCarthy and petitioner Mittelman acting in behalf of a company known as Sundown Oil. After Sundown proved unable to obtain more than the $50,000 down payment despite a series of intricate intercorporate maneuvers [3]—which led to further misrepre-

[3] To obtain the $50,000 for Ajax, arrangements were made to have Homestead Oil & Uranium Company advance the money based upon a proposed merger between Homestead sentations to Texas-Adams' stockholders[1]—and after McCarthy and his associates had obtained control of Texas-Adams, a supplemental agreement was drawn to substitute Texas-Adams for Sundown with respect to the purchase of the Ajax property. The agreement was never executed; no payment beyond the initial $50,000 paid by Sundown was ever made; and the Ajax property was never transferred (III R. 584-587).

(b) Osage Mining Company and the Longview Properties

In November 1955, Texas-Adams reported to its shareholders that the company had acquired certain Longview property for $300,000 and 850,000 shares of stock, and had secured the Osage Mining Co., which "has $300,000 in cash and a producing feldspar mine," for 375,000 shares of stock (VI R. 10-11). The actual facts were that, while petitioner Pettit and defendant McCarthy had earlier obtained an option to purchase certain oil and gas leases near Longview, Texas (III R. 814-817), the Longview property was never purchased. Moreover, the principal asset of the Osage Mining Company, a lease and Sundown into Dumont Marine & Instrument Company (II R. 329-330). Homestead's unsold stock was "purchased" by petitioner Mittelman through an indirect "loan" of $90,000 from Homestead's treasury (III R. 526-532). The proposed merger with Dumont and another attempted merger were not successful.

---

[1] Homestead was merged with Texas-Adams in February 1956, on the basis of an exchange of stock (II R. 348-352). Texas-Adams reported to its stockholders that Homestead had $140,000 on November 25, 1955, but this was not true (II R. 353; VI R. 10).

of a water-filled mine, was never in fact transferred to Texas-Adams (III R. 900-901, 942-943).

3. Issuance and Sale of Texas-Adams Stock for Non-existent Services and Purchases

(a) Transactions Nominally with George Jannis

Texas-Adams issued 132,000 shares of its stock to one George Jannis for "monies advanced" and "services rendered," and in full payment for 1,300,000 shares of Homestead Company. George Jannis worked for defendant Crosby, driving his car, working as a butler or "whatever he wanted" (III R. 651). Jannis never loaned money nor rendered services to Texas-Adams nor did he own the Homestead stock purportedly purchased from him (III R. 664-665, 711-712). These shares were always listed on the Homestead books in the name of petitioner Mittelman (III R. 569).

(b) United States Sulphur Company, Inc.

United States Sulphur Company, which never produced any sulphur, was "sold" to Texas-Adams for 250,000 shares of Texas-Adams stock, but the local property records reflected no transfer of the company's major asset, a "sulphur" lease (IV R. 1311-1317, 1391). An additional 150,000 shares of Texas-Adams stock were issued to L. W. Limited, a Canadian corporation whose vice president was petitioner Mittelman, as "part payment" for U. S. Sulphur Company, Inc. (VI R. 52-53; IV R. 1342-1345). The president of U. S. Sulphur had never heard of L. W. Limited (IV R. 1316).

4. Public Sales of Unregistered Stock

(a) The George Jannis Transaction

In connection with the purported issuance of 132,000 shares of Texas-Adams stock to George Jannis (supra, p. 8), petitioner Mittelman wrote three opinion letters to the Texas-Adams transfer company stating that the corporation's minutes and agreements had been examined and that the issue was exempt from registration and legally issued for a valid consideration (VI R. 20-25). The government traced almost all of the issue through various brokers to the public (Govt. Ex. 67; III R. 713-714; IV R. 1069-1071).

(b) Osage Mining Company and the Longview Lease

In connection with the purchase of the Osage Mining Company and the Longview, Texas, leases (supra, pp. 7-8), it was decided to use 375,000 shares of Texas-Adams stock—75,000 shares for the Osage mine and 300,000 shares issued to Osage but to be sold to provide funds to purchase the Longview Oil property (III R. 889). Petitioner Meredith prepared a draft form letter that these shares would be held for investment (V R. 1667-1668).

Texas-Adams actually issued 650,000 shares to purchase Osage through American Montana (III R. 838-842), and their public distribution was traced by the government (V R. 1572-1576). Texas-Adams also issued an additional 190,000 shares for this purchase through an Alabama Transfer Company (III R. 890-891, 900, 906).

(c) Empire Drilling Company

In November 1955, petitioner Pettit arranged to purchase all the stock of Empire Drilling Company for 150,000 shares of Texas-Adams stock (IV R. 1121, 1124-1125). Financing of Empire had been obtained by selling working interests in leases (IV R. 1123). Empire advised defendant McCarthy and petitioner Pettit that the S.E.C. had suggested that the failure to register might be a violation of law and Empire had ceased selling such interests (IV R. 1123-1125). Later arrangements were made to exchange the holdings of the 381 interest-holders for Texas-Adams stock (IV R. 1127-1130; V R. 1579) and to supply 500,000 shares for creditors (VI R. 37).

Petitioner Mittelman wrote an opinion letter stating he had examined all the documents and papers and that the issuance of 3,150,000 shares of Texas-Adams stock for the assets of Empire was exempt (VI R. 40-41). Petitioner Mittelman also obtained a similar opinion letter from Francis J. Purcell, a former Regional Administrator of the S.E.C. in New York, without advising him that the stock would be used to acquire the interests held by individuals in leases (IV R. 1249, 1265; VI R. 42-45).

In February 1956, when Purcell first heard of the exchange with interest-holders, he and petitioner Mittelman told S.E.C. officials that they would recommend that a registration statement be filed and the offering be discontinued immediately (IV R. 1266-1268, 1242). However, petitioner Mittelman told Empire to complete the exchanges in process, and petitioner Meredith continued to make exchanges (IV R. 1141-1144). No registration was ever filed for Texas-Adams (II R. 171).

To prevent sales by interest-holders of Texas-Adams stock from depressing the price, petitioner Meredith instructed Empire that they could guarantee the interest-holders $1 per share of Texas-Adams stock (IV R. 1146-1148). Many interest-holders who turned in their stock received either nothing or part payment in return (IV R. 1284-1287, 1290-1293, 1295-1296). An escrow was set up in Denver, which paid brokers two free shares for each share purchased at $1 (III R. 903-905; V R. 1537-1541).

(d) Comigu

On February 23, 1956, Texas-Adams obtained an option to purchase the assets of Comigu (abbreviated name of a French Guiana organization, see IV R. 1434) and an option to purchase 20 research permits for 2,000,000 shares of Texas-Adams stock (VI R. 56-58; Govt. Ex. 167-A). On March 9, 1956, defendant McCarthy and petitioner Mittelman exercised only the option for the research permits (VI R. 59; Govt. Ex. 167-B). Petitioner Mittelman wrote an opinion letter stating the 2,000,000 shares were exempt from registration as used to acquire assets (VI R. 60-61; Govt. Ex. 168-B; cf. Govt. Ex. 175-B; VI R. 66-67).

Part of these shares were sold to the public (IV R. 1400-1401, 1408; V R. 1563; VI R. 64-65; Govt. Ex. 175-A) and part used in the escrow for brokers who purchased shares of Empire, supra (V R. 1540-1541).

C. Participation by Petitioners.

We briefly summarize only the salient portion of the activities of those defendants who are petitioners: [5]

1. Worth Pettit, Jr.

Petitioner Worth Pettit, Jr. was a director and Vice President of Texas-Adams (VI R. 3; III R. 882). He took part in the arrangements to take control of Texas-Adams (II R. 211, 237-238, 241-242, 246, III R. 836) and his initials appear on the Agenda of operations (Govt. Ex. 18-A; VI R. 6-9). He and McCarthy were named as the transferees of 500,000 shares of Homestead which were initially purchased by Mittelman through an indirect "loan" from Homestead's treasury (III R. 568-570; see supra, n. 3, p. 7). He was one of the "main" participants in the Longview transaction (III R. 834, see also 814, 816, 822-827). He used $50,000 of Texas-Adams' proceeds to set up the Worth Investment Company of which only $30,000 was returned to Texas-Adams (IV R. 1099-1107). Part of the proceeds of the sale of Texas-Adams stock which was to be used to purchase the Longview leases was diverted to a friend of Pettit (III R. 1009-1010; IV R. 1143; supra, p. 9). He participated in the meeting to provide a bonus of two free shares of Texas-Adams stock to brokers for each share purchased from Empire interest holders (V R. 1536-1539). See also the summary in the charge to the jury (I R. 318-320).

---

[5] McCarthy was a Director and President of Texas-Adams and Crosby was a director and Secretary-Treasurer of Texas-Adams (VI R. 1-5). Neither is a party at this stage of the litigation.

2. Eugene Meredith

Petitioner Eugene Meredith was elected a vice-president of Texas-Adams (V R. 1620). He was the only petitioner to testify (V R. 1616). Meredith, who had prepared the draft form letter to hold the "Osage" shares for investment, had the certificate broken down for sale by the Alabama Transfer Company and then delivered the same certificate to be broken down by the Corporation Trust Company (V R. 1665-1668). He told Empire to guarantee its interest holders $1 per share for Texas-Adams stock and negotiated exchanges after Mittelman and Purcell told Empire to stop (IV R. 1142-1148). He participated in the escrow arrangement to provide two free shares of Texas-Adams for each share purchased (V R. 1540-1541). He furnished material for a press release on Empire Drilling Company (IV R. 1136-1141), suggested people to whom the material should be sent (V R. 1517), and gathered material for a publicity brochure (V R. 1492-1494). He told Empire interest holders of the holdings of Texas-Adams and gave out literature (IV R. 1285, 1292, 1298). He participated in the negotiations for United States Sulphur Company (IV R. 1311). See also the summary in the charge to the jury (I R. 310-312).

3. Leo B. Mittelman

Petitioner Leo B. Mittelman, a lawyer, participated in the early Ajax and Homestead projects. Part of petitioner Pettit's funds for purchase of control of Texas-Adams passed through Mittelman's bank account (III R. 571; II R. 330-331; 293-295). He told Holland, the head of Homestead, that he was a member of the McCarthy group and he and Holland were designated co-signers on Homestead's bank in Billings, Montana (II R. 337). He purchased 1,800,000 Homestead shares on an indirect loan from Homestead itself (III R. 529-531), of which 1,300,000 shares remained in his name throughout the period involved (III R. 569).

He wrote an opinion, "hav[ing] examined all the necessary papers", providing for the issuance of 52,000 shares of Texas-Adams to George Jannis for the acquisition of these 1,300,000 Homestead shares (VI R. 24-25). He also went with Jannis to Stratford Factors to redeem these 1,300,000 Homestead shares (which had been hypothecated) for 20,000 shares of Texas-Adams stock, and did not turn the shares over to Jannis (III R. 665-671; IV R. 1456-1458, 1473-1478). Subsequently, he paid Stratford Factors and then sold 7,500 shares of the 20,000 Texas-Adams' shares in the name of his sister (III R. 645-650; IV R. 1458, 1478-1479; VI R. 16-19).

He wrote the opinion letter regarding the issuance of Texas-Adams stock to purchase the assets of Empire Drilling and obtained a similar one from Francis J. Purcell (VI R. 40-45). He also wrote letters regarding the interest holders exchange (VI R. 50-51), but did not so inform Purcell until they went to Denver to discuss the issue with the S.E.C. (IV R. 1263-1267, see also 1301-1308).

He wrote an opinion letter concerning the issuance of 250,000 shares of Texas-Adams to purchase "all of the assets" of United States Sulphur Company (VI R. 54-55). He later wrote a letter for the issuance of 150,000 shares of Texas-Adams' stock to be put in the name of L. W. Limited, as "part payment" of the purchase price of U.S. Sulphur Company, Inc. (VI R. 52-53). L. W. Limited was a Canadian corporation, of which the president of U.S. Sulphur had never heard, and which had been organized with Mittelman as vice-president (IV R. 1316, 1342-1345, 1379-1381). See also the summary in the charge (I R. 312-317).

ARGUMENT

While not denominated a question presented, each petitioner argues that under the evidence he was not guilty. Pettit claims "he participated to a limited extent in legitimate business negotiations" and was "the most aggrieved victim of McCarthy's folly" (Pettit, Pet. 8). Meredith claims he merely signed papers and "ran errands" (Meredith, Pet. 6). Mittelman claims his case rests in large part on testimony of witnesses "whose testimony involved perjury" and describes one government witness as "a swindler and liar" (Mittelman, Pet. 13, 30). The short answer is that these are matters settled by the jury. Meredith, who took the stand, clearly was not believed. Mittelman, who did not take the stand, cannot now rely on his brief to explain his actions. After conviction, evidence should be viewed with the inferences in favor of the government. Glasser v. United States, 315 U.S. 60, 80. Here the evidence fully supports the verdict that the scheme was fraudulent. The jury which observed the witnesses was most careful (in two evenings and one day of deliberations), as evidenced by the acquittal of two defendants and the acquittal of other defendants on certain counts. The scheme, always based on the use of other people's money—involving insider profits (Empire, U.S. Sulphur), kickbacks (Jannis, Osage Mining), and wholesale misrepresentation—was so blatantly fraudulent that the jury could properly conclude that none of these three petitioners, who were so closely connected with it, could have been innocent. It is in the light of the obvious strength of the government's case that petitioners' legal arguments should be viewed.

1. The indictment.

Petitioners Meredith (Pet. 2-3, questions 1-4) and Mittelman (Pet. 3, questions 1 and 2, 41-45) make general attacks on the indictment, but it is plain that the indictment clearly charged the elements of the crimes. The fact that Count 2 incorporated by reference most of the paragraphs of Count 1 does not create duplicity. Such pleading is specifically recognized by Rule 7(c) F. R. Crim. P. Nor is duplicity created by the fact that various means, which violate more than one statute, are used to fulfill the scheme. The wire fraud in Count 1 and the mail fraud in Count 2 do not make the schemes "separate" (Mittelman, Pet. 42) but only the crimes separate. The mere fact that petitioner Mittelman was not charged by the grand jury in Count 1 does not mean the evidence was not admissible against him, since the allegations of paragraphs 2 through 5 of Count 1 were specifically incorporated by reference in Count 2 (paragraph 2) in which Mittelman was charged (II R. 40).

Petitioner Mittelman also contends that the part of the indictment charging failure to register is invalid because transactions "not involving any public offering" are exempt under Section 4(1) of the Securities Act of 1933, 15 U.S.C. 77d, and, he argues, "public offering" is too vague and uncertain a term to support a criminal conviction. This argument is specious. The words read in their normal sense make it clear that stock intended to be sold to the general public, as here, would be a public offering. In addition, as the court below pointed out, this Court's decision in Securities and Exchange Commission v. Ralston Purina Co., 346 U.S. 119, 125, made it clear that only an offering "to those who are shown to be able to fend for themselves is a transaction 'not involving any public offering.' " The facts of this case aptly demonstrate that the people who bought Texas-Adams shares, including the Empire interest holders, had no protection of the kind which would have been provided by registration.

2. Alleged inconsistency of the verdict.

Petitioner Mittelman was convicted on Count 2 of mailing on November 30, 1955, a false stockholders report to Ethel Davis Lake for the purpose of executing the fraudulent scheme (II R. 39-50). He was acquitted in Count 12 of mailing a similar report, on December 2, 1955, to Solomon Bloom (II R. 57-62). Mittelman claims these verdicts are inconsistent, and, recognizing that inconsistency has been held insignificant in Dunn v. United States, 284 U.S. 390, asks this Court for "reconsideration" of that decision (Mittelman, Pet. 45-47). There is no occasion to reconsider Dunn in the context of a mail fraud indictment involving one scheme and multiple mailings. Whether acquittal on particular counts represents the jury's conclusion that connection with a particular mailing was not shown or merely a degree of lenity, acquittal on any one count does not suggest lack of conviction as to guilt.

3. The notes and witness sheets prepared by government attorneys.

Petitioners' argument that they were not supplied with the notes of interviews of witnesses and the resulting witness sheets prepared by the government attorneys is an unwarranted effort to extend the scope of 18 U.S.C. 3500.[8] Both government attorneys testified on voir dire that they interviewed witnesses in preparation of the case and sometimes made notes. These notes were usually destroyed, routinely, when the matters had been incorporated in a witness sheet. None of the notes were verbatim and none were deliberately destroyed. The trial court examined witness sheets and notes in camera and found they did not come within the purview of 18 U.S.C. 3500 (see e.g., II R. 404-447, IV R. 1084-1095, V R. 1808-1810).

[8] The defense was given literally hundreds of pages of testimony of witnesses, consisting of grand jury minutes, proceedings before the referee in bankruptcy, a reported investigation conducted by the Attorney General of New York State, and various interviews of postal inspectors (e.g., II R. 338-340, 369, III R. 915-916, IV R. 1032-1034, 1360).

Certainly, the statute was not intended to change the normal working habits of trial lawyers and require that they keep and produce miscellaneous notes, impressions, and "memory-joggers" used to prepare witness sheets, which are used in turn to examine witnesses at trials. The notes here were not a substantially verbatim record nor statements adopted by the witnesses. After a full voir dire they were properly held not producible. Palermo v. United States, 360 U.S. 343; Campbell v. United States, 365 U.S. 85.

4. The court's charge to the jury on character evidence.

Petitioner Mittelman, who had character witnesses, complains that the charge to the jury on reputation contained a "subtle suggestion" that the accused had deceived his friends (Mittelman, Pet. 50-52).

Any such suggestion was completely neutralized, so far as character evidence was concerned, by the court's broader instruction that character evidence is not a witness' personal opinion of character but constitutes a description of the defendant's reputation. Michelson v. United States, 335 U.S. 469, 477. Moreover, the charge informed the jury that character evidence may, in itself, create a reasonable doubt of guilt (I R. 160-161). Finally, petitioner did not except to this charge as is required by Rule 30, F.R. Crim. P.

5. The reversal as to three stockbrokers by the court of appeals.

All petitioners complain that, because the court of appeals dismissed the indictment against the three brokers for lack of evidence of criminal intent, the court should have ordered a new trial for these management petitioners, who might otherwise be prejudiced by the admission of evidence not admissible against them alone (Pettit, Pet. 13-14; Meredith, Pet. 15; Mittelman, Pet. 52-56). However, the evidence relating to the brokers which would have been inadmissible had the brokers not been defendants was minor when compared to the overwhelming evidence relating to petitioners and thus in this extended trial was plainly not prejudicial.

Petitioners' citation of Schaffer v. United States, 362 U.S. 511, is inapposite. There, the problem involved the right to charge and try individuals in different counts, once the conspiracy charge was dismissed. Here, the conspiracy charge was never dismissed. The mere fact that some persons charged as conspirators are not convicted does not require a new trial as to the others.

6. The plea of guilty by defendant McCarthy.

All petitioners contend that, because of the guilty plea by defendant McCarthy, and the attendant newspaper publicity, they should have been granted a new trial (Pettit, Pet. 9; Meredith, Pet. 15; Mittelman, Pet. 61-62).

Shortly after the trial began, defendant McCarthy pleaded guilty outside the hearing of the jury (II R. 198-208). The trial court cautioned the jury generally not to read newspapers (II R. 227). It refused the request by one defense counsel (opposed by others) to ask the jurors to report if they obtained outside information pertinent to the case (II R. 227-230). At the end of the trial the court made inquiry of defense counsel as to how to handle the matter and most counsel wanted nothing special said (V R. 1820-1822). During the charge the court merely stated that McCarthy was no longer on trial and instructed the jury to consider the guilt or innocence of each defendant separately (I R. 161, 158, 330-331). After the jury verdict finding certain defendants guilty, one counsel filed an affidavit stating that a juror had told him that the jury knew of McCarthy's plea of guilty, but the juror refused to give a written statement to that effect (V R. 1877-1897). The court denied the motion for a new trial thereon (V R. 1874).

Whether to grant a new trial because of newspaper publicity is a matter for the discretion of the trial court and depends upon the circumstances of each case. Holt v. United States, 218 U.S. 245; Marshall v. United States, 360 U.S. 310. In this case, McCarthy's guilty plea could have been taken in front of the jury. United States v. Falcone, 109 F. 2d 579 (C.A. 2), affirmed, 311 U.S. 205. Hence, the careful admonition and charge to the jury were sufficient.

7. Only a single conspiracy was shown.

All petitioners claim that the proof showed multiple conspiracies, citing Kotteakos v. United States, 328 U.S. 750. However, as appears from the facts outlined in the Statement, supra, this case involved one integrated scheme—in which the conspirators lacked financing except for the money supplied by uninformed stockholders, and petitioners took action resulting in profits to the conspirators through insider profits and kickbacks. All these petitioners knew each other and played complementary roles in this one general conspiracy.

8. Admission of evidence of the Worth Investment transaction.

Petitioners Meredith and Mittelman complain of the admission of evidence as to the unlawful use of Texas-Adams money by petitioner Pettit to set up the Worth Investment Co. (see the Statement, supra, p. 12). This type of personal use of the stock of Texas-Adams or its proceeds was clearly contemplated in this scheme, and the evidence was thus admissible against all. Moreover, this particular complaint is totally without merit since, at the specific request of defense counsel, the court instructed the jury in the charge to consider the evidence only as against Pettit and not the other defendants (V R. 1846). The same is true of the Crosby-Jannis letter (I R. 213-214).

9. Cross-examination of Greenberg.

Petitioners object to the fact that the trial court permitted the government to cross-examine one of its witnesses who did not testify . . he had previously indicated and was hostile. Witness Greenberg had told the postal inspectors that he had received some stock in Jannis' name from Gordon, a New York broker, to be sold in Canada (VI R. 68-71). At the trial he testified that one Dawson, who had died in the meantime, had given him the stock (III R. 777-782). On examination he stated he did not discuss with the inspectors the source of the certificates and he thought the talk was "off the record" (III R. 786). Then he said he did not recall, and then "I imagine they did ask * * *." (III R. 787). In these circumstances the witness was properly treated as hostile. The trial judge at the time carefully explained to the jury that any statements by counsel in questions were not evidence (III R. 804).

10. Alleged bias of the trial judge.

Petitioners' complaint of the attitude of the trial judge is not supported by the record. Most of the instances cited by petitioners were brought about by a long trial which required strong control by the judge. As the court below noted (VII R. 29-30), Mittelman's attorney "had consistent difficulty in marshalling his relevant facts" which resulted in an inordinately long, repetitious trial which presented difficult problems of control. The trial court's activities did not show bias in any way.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, it is respectfully submitted that the petitions for writs of certiorari should be denied.

ARCHIBALD COX,
Solicitor General.

HERBERT J. MILLER, JR.,
Assistant Attorney General.

BEATRICE ROSENBERG,
THEODORE G. GILINSKY,
Attorneys.

FEBRUARY 1962

☆ U. S. GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE 1962 626817 873

MOTION FILED APR 9 1962 LIBRARY COURT, U. S.

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1961

No. 587

LEO B. MITTELMAN,

Petitioner,

v.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

Respondent.

TO THE HONORABLE THE CHIEF JUSTICE AND THE ASSOCIATE JUSTICES OF THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES:

MOTION FOR LEAVE TO FILE PETITION FOR REHEARING OUT OF TIME

EDWARD M. GARLOCK,
Attorney for Petitioner,
521 Fifth Avenue,
New York 17, New York.

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1961

No. 587

LEO B. MITTELMAN,

Petitioner,

v.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

Respondent.

TO THE HONORABLE THE CHIEF JUSTICE AND THE ASSOCIATE JUSTICES OF THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES:

MOTION FOR LEAVE TO FILE PETITION FOR REHEARING OUT OF TIME.

On the annexed affidavit of the undersigned petitioner respectfully moves for leave to file out of time the petition for rehearing submitted herewith.

Dated: April 7, 1962.

EDWARD M. GARLOCK,
Attorney for Petitioner,
Office & P. O. Address,
521 Fifth Avenue,
New York 17, N. Y.

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1961

No. 587

LEO B. MITTELMAN,

Petitioner,

v.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

Respondent.

AFFIDAVIT IN SUPPORT OF THE MOTION.

SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK } COUNTY AND STATE OF NEW YORK } ss:

EDWARD M. GARLOCK, being duly sworn, deposes and says:

(1)

I now represent petitioner in this cause, and my notice of appearance will be filed herewith. This affidavit is submitted in support of petitioner's motion for leave to file the annexed petition for rehearing out of time.

(2)

The Court's attention is respectfully directed to the fact that the annexed petition is based on the prosecution's admitted and knowing use of false and prejudicial testimony against petitioner—a fact that can hardly fail to influence the discretion to which the motion is addressed.

(3)

The petition for a writ of certiorari was denied on February 19, 1962; and the time to file a petition for rehearing, in compliance with Rule 58, expired at midnight on March 16, 1962. The circumstances of petitioner's default under Rule 58 are set forth below:

(a) I represented petitioner in the District Court and the Court of Appeals; but, for reasons of health, I was unable to represent him in the preparation of his petition for a writ of certiorari, or to assist its preparation by new counsel. After the petition for a writ was denied I undertook, against medical advice, to prepare a petition for rehearing. I did so because, among other things, the petition failed to demonstrate the prosecution's knowing use of false testimony against petitioner and to apprise the Court of the serious resultant question of denial of due process, and because, for that reason and many others based on the conduct of the trial, it is my earnest conviction that petitioner was not accorded a fair trial.

(b) On or about February 22, 1962 Dr. Earl C. Shaw, whose office is at 30 Central Park West in New York City, examined me, made a finding of acute exhaustion, and ordered complete rest for at least ten days and minimal professional work for an indefinite period thereafter. The sustained and intensive work necessary for timely completion of the petition for rehearing was therefore interdicted.

(c) In consequence only the portion to which the annexed petition is limited had been drafted by March 14; and I worked continuously thereafter until 8 p. m. on March 16 to complete points dealing with other and equally important grounds for rehearing.

(d) Additional loss of time resulted from unexpected difficulty in obtaining emergency printing services, and the death on March 12 of an old and close friend.

(e) At 8 p. m. on March 16 it became necessary to limit the petition to the then draft of the portion which comprises the annexed petition; and, as so limited, it was printed and bound by 9:20 p. m. I then rushed by taxicab to La Guardia Airport to catch the 10 p. m. shuttle plane to Washington, and missed it by a few seconds. No other timely transportation was available.

(f) After calling the guardroom at the Courthouse and Mr. Cullinan at his home, I sent a long telegram to Mr. Justice Harlan requesting an enlargement of time. But it was not delivered until March 17; and the request was denied for that reason.

(4)

It is respectfully submitted that these facts, coupled with the serious grounds of the annexed petition, should persuade the exercise of the Court's discretion in petitioner's favor.

(5)

Submission of this motion has been delayed by a long and fruitless search for lost copies of Court Exhibits 83 and 84, and unavailing requests for permission to inspect and copy from the originals (see infra p. 6, fn. 4).

(6)

I certify that this affidavit, and the motion it supports, are presented in good faith and not for delay.

EDWARD M. GARLOCK.

Sworn to before me this 7th day of April, 1962.

BENJAMIN F. OAKLEY
NOTARY PUBLIC, STATE OF NEW YORK
No. 24-8171400
Qualified in Kings County
Cert. filed with Kings & N. Y. Co. Clks.
Term Expires March 30, 1964

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1961

No. 587

LEO B. MITTELMAN,

Petitioner,

v.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

Respondent.

TO THE HONORABLE THE CHIEF JUSTICE AND THE ASSOCIATE JUSTICES OF THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES:

PETITION FOR REHEARING OF PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SECOND CIRCUIT

EDWARD M. GARLOCK,
Attorney for Petitioner,
521 Fifth Avenue,
New York 17, New York.

INDEX.

PAGE

Grounds of the Petition 1

The prosecution's admitted and knowing use of false and prejudicial testimony against petitioner raises a serious question of due process, and requires the exercise in his favor of the Court's supervisory powers over federal administration of justice 2

A. The background of Carroll's false testimony, and the prosecutor's prejudicial purpose in adducing it 2

B. Carroll's testimony, the prosecutor's prior knowledge of its purport, and its intentional elicitation 4

C. The proof that Carroll's testimony was necessarily false, and the proof—apart from the government's admissions below—that the prosecutor knew it was false when he adduced it 6

D. The government's admissions below, regarding the falsity of Carroll's testimony and the prosecutor's prior knowledge of its falsity, and the prosecutor's written admissions of such knowledge 7

E. The question of due process 10

F. The question of remand 12

Conclusion 12

Certificate of Service 13

Table of Cases.

	PAGE
Coggins v. O'Brien, 188 F. 2d 130, 139 (3 Cir.)	12
Communist Party v. Subversive Activities Control Board, 351 U. S. 115, 124	11
Kyle v. United States, 297 F. 2d 507, 513-14 (2 Cir.)	12
Mesaroth v. United States, 352 U. S. 1, 9	11
Mooney v. Holohan, 294 U. S. 103, 113	11
Napue v. Illinois, 360 U. S. 264	11
People v. Savides, 1 N. Y. 2d 554, 557-8	11, 12

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1961

No. 587

LEO B. MITTELMAN,

Petitioner,

v.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

Respondent.

TO THE HONORABLE THE CHIEF JUSTICE AND THE ASSOCIATE JUSTICES OF THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES:

PETITION FOR REHEARING OF PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SECOND CIRCUIT

Petitioner prays for rehearing of his petition for a writ of certiorari, which the Court denied on February 19, 1962, on the grounds:

that his petition failed to state the facts showing the prosecution's deliberate use against him of false and prejudicial testimony; and hence that it failed to apprise the Court of the serious resultant question of denial of due process.

The prosecution's admitted and knowing use of false and prejudicial testimony against petitioner raises a serious question of due process, and requires the exercise in his favor of the Court's supervisory powers over federal administration of justice.

The petition presented the question whether petitioner had a fair trial where the prosecutor knowingly adduced false and prejudicial testimony against him (p. 4). The testimony thus referred to was Carroll's testimony, that on July 15, 1955 McCarthy claimed control of Texas-Adams in petitioner's presence, that on July 22, 1955 McCarthy and petitioner claimed such control, and that on August 8, 9 or 10, 1955 petitioner said that Texas-Adams would probably merge with Homestead—testimony designed to link petitioner with knowledge of and participation in the fraudulent Count 1 scheme. But the petition failed to show plainly that Carroll's testimony was necessarily false, and that the prosecutor knew it was false when he adduced it. Had the petition done so it is hardly conceivable that this Court would have condoned such gross misconduct and refused to entertain the question of due process it plainly raises.

A. The background of Carroll's false testimony, and the prosecutor's prejudicial purpose in adducing it:

Count 1 alleged that the defendants Crosby, McCarthy and Pettit—and only those defendants—devised and executed a scheme to defraud Texas-Adams' stockholders by diverting its funds to purchase a controlling block of its stock (J. 36a-39a).

Count 2 alleged a different scheme and named petitioner, Meredith and Texas-Adams as additional defendants. But it incorporated the operative allegations of Count 2 by reference (J. 40a). And Count 50, which charged a conspiracy to violate the Securities Act, also incorporated those allegations by reference (J. 87a-8a).

The government's Count 1 evidence comprised all the testimony of nine witnesses (J. 157a-286a), portions of the testimony of three others (J. 286a-308a, 836a-8a, 851a-4a, 858a, 1337a-40a, 1352a-3a), and numerous exhibits. None of it connected petitioner with the conception or execution of the Count 1 scheme, directly or indirectly.[1] On the contrary, it established: that Norman Annenberg, who had represented Crosby since 1952 (J. 835a), and his associate Emanuel Lewis Greene, represented the Count 1 defendants in the acquisition negotiations and at the closing (J. 267a-8a, 279a-82a); that their prospective fee was 100,000 Texas-Adams shares (Ex. 18B); that the acquisition of Texas-Adams was a minor aspect of a joint venture in which only the Count 1 defendants were participants (Ex. 18B); that they contemplated continued employment of Messrs. Annenberg and Greene as counsel in the conduct of the joint venture (Exs. 18A and B); and that the joint venture did not contemplate acquisition of or merger with Homestead (id.).

Moreover, the prosecution never claimed or tried to show that the preceding Dumont and Continental transactions, in which petitioner participated with McCarthy and others (but not with Crosby, Pettit or Meredith), con-

---

[1] The sole reference to petitioner in all this evidence occurs in Ex. 31B, a chart which traced the source of the $45,000 paid at the closing of the Count 1 transaction. It shows that on September 19, Pettit transferred $10,000 to McCarthy via petitioner's bank account; and that later McCarthy used part of Pettit's funds to consummate the transaction. There is no evidence that petitioner had any knowledge of or connection with McCarthy's later use of those funds.

templated any diversion of corporate funds to defray the cost of acquiring control; and the evidence proved the contrary (see e.g. Exs. 38 and M55F). Carroll's testimony therefore served the important prosecution purposes of connecting petitioner before the jury with knowledge of the Count 1 transaction, and implying his participation in it.[2] And, as will soon appear, the prosecutor's knowledge that Carroll's testimony was necessarily false did not deter him from using it.

B. Carroll's testimony, the prosecutor's prior knowledge of its purport, and its intentional elicitation:

Accordingly Carroll testified as a government witness: that, at a meeting in New York on July 15, 1955, and in petitioner's presence, McCarthy named Texas-Adams as one of several companies he controlled and could merge with Homestead (J. 518a-20a); that, at a second meeting in Denver on July 22, 1955, McCarthy and petitioner "discussed • • • the merger of Homestead into one of the McCarthy companies" and named Texas-Adams as one of those companies (J. 523a-4a); and that, at a third meeting in Denver on August 8, 9 or 10, 1955, petitioner discussed the impending "merger of Homestead into one of the three companies mentioned prior" and said "it would probably be Texas-Adams" (J. 526a-7a).

There can be no question regarding the prosecutor's prior knowledge that, if he desired to elicit it, Carroll would give such testimony. For Carroll had given similar testimony before the grand jury which indicted petitioner (Court Ex. 7 for identification, pp. 14-16).

---

[2] The pre-Texas-Adams Homestead evidence, which the Court below conceded was "quite prejudicial and might have been excluded," was designed to establish a motive for such otherwise unproved participation. The government's trial memorandum, supporting the admissibility of that evidence, asserted that it "establishes the (petitioner's) motive for the robbery of the Texas-Adams treasury" in the Count 1 transaction.

Nor can there be any question regarding the prosecutor's intention to elicit such testimony. The record speaks for itself. As to the July 15 meeting the relevant questions and answers were (J. 520a):

> "Q. Did he name the corporations he was in control of? A. Yes, he mentioned three corporations to the best of my recollection, Dumont Marine, Texas-Adams, and Superior Chemical I think or Superior Dye.
>
> "Q. Now, during what part of the conversation was Mr. Mittelman present? A. Mr. Mittelman was present during most of the conversation, * * *."

And as to the July 22 meeting the relevant questions and answers were (J. 524a):

> "Q. Now what was said to whom and by whom?
>
> * * * *
>
> A. Mr. McCarthy and Mr. Mittelman discussed with Mr. Branch and myself and Mr. Holland the merger of Homestead into one of the McCarthy companies.
>
> Q. Were the McCarthy companies specified? A. Yes, sir, they were.
>
> Q. What were they, sir? A. One was Dumont or Dumont Marine & Aviation, I believe, one was Superior Tool & Die, and Texas Eastern—or Texas-Adams were the theree companies mentioned at that time.
>
> The Court: Well, were they mentioned in the alternative or in the aggregate or how were they mentioned?
>
> The Witness: Sir, they were mentioned as one of them being a possible parent company for Homestead to merge into.
>
> The Court: I see."

C. The proof that Carroll's testimony was necessarily false, and the proof—apart from the government's admissions below—that the prosecutor knew it was false when he adduced it:

Many days later another government witness, Rosen, testified: that he and Crosby placed an advertisement in the Wall Street Journal on August 9, 1955, seeking control of a public company; that he received a reply from the broker defendants; and that he and Crosby conferred with them thereafter regarding purchase of their controlling block of Texas-Adams shares (J. 1337a-40a; 1352a-3a; Goldberg, R. and G. Ex. 18).[3]

The prosecutor himself referred to that advertisement as "The one that led to Texas-Adams" (J. 1337a). Moreover, Rosen had been subjected to intensive interrogation before the trial (J. 1354a-7a); and the prosecutor obviously knew the facts regarding that advertisement, and the events it set in train, before Carroll testified.

If the Court entertains any doubt that the prosecutor knew those facts before he elicited Carroll's testimony, it is respectfully urged to examine Rosen's prior testimony before the Attorney General of the State of New York, his prior testimony before the grand jury which indicted petitioner, and the prosecutor's notes of his prior interviews with Rosen (respectively Court Exs. 84, 83 and 82 for identification).[4] Petitioner is confident that examination of those records will dispel any such doubt. And he challenges the Solicitor General to make and support the claim that the prosecutor did not know Carroll's testimony was necessarily false when he adduced it.

---

[3] The text of the advertisement appears at J. 1352a.

[4] The United States Attorney has refused repeated requests for permission to inspect and copy from Court Exhibits 83 and 84, in aid of this petition; and the trial judge denied access to Court Exhibit 82 (J. 1357a).

(1)

D. The government's admissions below, regarding the falsity of Carroll's testimony and the prosecutor's prior knowledge of its falsity, and the prosecutor's written admissions of such knowledge:

The government conceded below perforce that Carroll's testimony, about conversations with petitioner and in his presence regarding Texas-Adams before the advertisement "that led to Texas-Adams"[5], was necessarily false. It made admissions which plainly imply that the prosecutor knew the testimony was necessarily false when he adduced it. And the prosecutor himself made written statements in a prior trial memorandum showing such knowledge.

In view of the importance of the government's admissions, and to bar any question of mistaken interpretation, the relevant portion of its answering brief below is quoted in the margin[5] (pp. 222-3). These admissions plainly con-

---

[5] The meetings on July 15 and 22 preceded the advertisement. The meeting on August 8, 9 or 10 probably preceded it, and certainly preceded Crosby's first meeting with the broker defendants.

[5] "Carroll's testimony that Texas-Adams was mentioned at the July 22 meeting was unquestionably wrong. And it was the government that proved he was mistaken. For Holland, who preceded Caroll, testified that only Dumont was mentioned at that meeting and that Texas-Adams' name did not come up until mid-September (J. 336a-37a, 348a). And the government established through Rosen that the advertisement which led to Texas-Adams was placed in early August (J. 1337a). * * *

"Carroll's recollection was in eror, but Mittelman, apparently, would have had Government trial counsel prevent him from testifying to what was his recollection,[143a] a grossly improper suggestion. Instead, the prosecutor, with commendable candor and fairness, put both Carroll's testimony and the contradictory testimony in evidence.

"Though the Government had no choice but to permit Carroll to testify as his recollection dictated, in the trial memorandum relating to the Homestead evidence, which was submitted to the tradict the finding below "that any direct or veiled charge of actual misconduct leveled against the government's attorneys is wholly without substance" (294 F. 2d at p. 946).

4.

First: In response to petitioner's brief below, which demonstrated the falsity and conscious use of the testimony regarding the July 22 meeting, the government's answering brief conceded that "Carroll's testimony that Texas Adams was mentioned at the July 22 meeting was unquestionably wrong"; and it added in a related footnote: "There is, of course, no way of knowing whether Carroll's recollection was in error or whether he wilfully perjured himself." (pp. 222-3; emphasis added). These admissions apply with the equal force to the July 15 and August 8-10 meetings.

Second: The answering brief sought to excuse the offer of the July 22 testimony by asserting the government proved

---

Trial Judge before the evidence was offered, the Government rejected Carroll's testimony, as the following excerpts reveal:

> '5 On July 22, . . . Homestead was told by Mittelman that various mergers and acquisitions . . . would be effectuated. No mention of Texas-Adams was made.' (Emphasis added.)

"And, in setting forth the facts of the mid-September conference between Holland, Mittelman and McCarthy, the memorandum states:

> '11. • • • McCarthy, in Mittelman's presence, stated that he and his group were in control of Texas-Adams • • •. Previously other companies had been mentioned. This was the first mention of Texas-Adams • • •.' (Emphasis added.)"

"'148a. There is, of course, no way of knowing whether Carroll's recollection was in error or whether he wilfully perjured himself • • •."

Carroll was mistaken by prior and allegedly contradictory testimony of Holland respecting that meeting, and its proof through Rosen "that the advertisement which led to Texas Adams was placed in early August". The excuse will be dealt with later. Its significance here is the plain implication that the prosecutor knew Carroll's testimony was false when he adduced it.

Third: An admission of such knowledge is implicit in the argument that it would have been "grossly improper" to prevent Carroll from testifying to what was his recollection", and that the government "had no choice but to permit Carroll to testify as his recollection dictated".

Fourth: Finally, the admissions regarding the trial memorandum, which was submitted before Carroll testified, are conclusive. The answering brief flatly stated that in the memorandum "the Government rejected Carroll's testimony", and quoted in proof of such prior rejection statements that "no mention of Texas Adams was made" at the July 22 meeting and that "the first mention of Texas-Adams" was made in mid-September. Assuming arguendo that the trial judge regarded those statements as a rejection of Carroll's testimony, he failed to instruct the jury regarding its conceded falsity. And, of course, the prosecutor made no such statements or disavowal before the jury.

(2)

The excuse, that the government itself proved Carroll "was mistaken" regarding the July 22 meeting through Holland's prior testimony "that only Dumont was mentioned at that meeting and that Texas Adams' name did not come up until mid-September (J. 336a-37a, 348a)", was meretricious. If Holland had given such testimony, it could not excuse a deliberate offer of contradictory testimony which the prosecutor knew was false. But even the excuse itself was false: Holland gave no such testimony; it ignored the fact that Holland was not present at the earlier meeting in New York (J. 518a) and therefore could not contradict Carroll's testimony about that meeting; and it was silent about the August testimony.

(3)

The proposition, that the government is under a duty to adduce false and prejudicial testimony at the behest of a witness it knows is either mistaken or perjurious, is palpably indefensible. But, assuming its validity arguendo, its necessary corollary is a duty to disavow such testimony before the jury. There was no such disavowal by the prosecutor in summation or elsewhere: there was none by the trial judge in his charge or elsewhere; and the latter refused to entertain exceptions or requests to charge on the facts (J. 1847-8a, 1852a).

E. The question of due process:

The proposition, that a serious question of due process is raised by the deliberate use against petitioner of prejudicial testimony which could not be true and probably constituted wilful perjury, hardly requires supporting argument.

Questions of probable guilt or innocence, or of the weight of the evidence, a irrelevant here. The prosecution's conceded and deliberate use of false and prejudicial testimony may not be swept under the rug of the "harmless error" rule; it involves not only a denial of due process, but also the integrity of the administration of justice, and the honor of the Government of the United States.

In Mooney v. Holohan, 294 U. S. 103 at p. 113, this Court condemned "a deliberate deception of court and jury by the presentation of testimony known to be perjured", as "inconsistent with the rudimentary demands of justice". Here the injury to petitioner is the same, whether the prosecutor knew that Carroll was committing perjury or merely that his testimony could not be true. In either case, his testimony was tainted.

In Mesarosh v. United States, 352 U. S. 1, this Court said (p. 9):

> "The dignity of the United States Government will not permit the conviction of any person on tainted testimony. This conviction is tainted, and there can be no other just result than to accord petitioner a new tiral".

This is a stronger case than Mesarosh; for there the government's use of perjured testimony was unwitting, and the government itself sought to remedy the injustice; but here the use was conscious and deliberate, and the government has thus far attempted to defend it.[6]

And in Communist Party v. Subversive Activities Control Board, 351 U. S. 115, 124, the Court held in effect that tainted evidence invalidated a finding however amply supported by other evidence. That was a civil proceeding before an administrative body. The holding applies with greater force to a criminal trial before a jury (see e.g.: Napue v. Illinois, 360 U. S. 264; People v. Savvides, 1 N. Y.

---

[6] The Government's brief opposing the petition for a writ of certiorari was silent about Carroll's false testimony and its conscious use by the prosecution—perhaps because the petition failed to state the relevant facts with sufficient force and clarity. Petitioner has faith that the Solicitor General will meet the grave questions they raise with the candor this Court commended in Mesarosh, supra.

2d 554, 557-8; Coggins v. O'Brien, 188 F. 2d 130, 139 (3 Cir.); Kyle v. United States, 297 F. 2d 507, 513-14 (2 Cir.)).

F. The question of remand:

Any doubt regarding the prosecutor's knowing use of Carroll's false testimony must be resolved by remand for an appropriate hearing.

Conclusion.

It is respectfully submitted that substantial justice requires reconsideration of the petition for a writ of certiorari.

The undersigned hereby certifies that this petition is presented in good faith and not for delay.

Respectfully submitted,

EDWARD M. GARLOCK,
Counsel for Petitioner.

Certificate of Service.

I, Edward M. Garlock, attorney for the petitioner herein, and a member of the Bar of the Supreme Court of the United States, hereby certify that, on April 7, 1962, I served 3 copies of the foregoing petition for rehearing on the United States of America, by mailing them in a duly addressed envelope, with air mail postage prepaid, to the Solicitor General, Department of Justice, Washington 25, D. C.

Edward M. Garlock,
Attorney for Petitioner,
Office & P. O. Address,
521 Fifth Avenue,
New York 17, N. Y.